PIANOS.

CHICKERING!

THE KING OF PIANOS

ALWAYS VICTORIOUS!

The World-Renowned Chickering!

It was well said years ago that the Gold Medals awarded to the Chickering would make a KING'S RANSOM.

The latest triumph for the Chickering & Sons Piano was at the Mechanics' Institute Fair in Boston, where they were awarded ONE GOLD MEDAL and TWO SILVER MEDALS over all competitors.

The Chickering Piano has stood in the front rank for nearly a century, always in the lead and always the first to introduce improvements. The inventors of

THE IRON FRAME,
THE OVERSTRUNG BASS,
THE CIRCULAR SCALE,
THE AGRAFFE BRIDGE,

All of which have been universally copied by all other makers.

Their last and crowning invention is the Complete Metal Action, substituting Metal for wood in all parts of the action liable to be affected by dampness or changes of temperature, making it the only Piano in the world that is insensible to atmospheric changes; as wooden plows, wood axletrees, wooden buildings, wooden ships, wooden clocks, wooden bridges, have all been displaced by more substantial iron and steel, or other suitable metal, so the Metallic Action of the Chickering Piano is destined to displace the old-fashioned wooden action now in use by all other makers.

Splendid assortment of new Chickering Pianos, Grand, Square, and Upright, including some superb instruments for the Holiday trade, just received at the Music-Rooms of NEWS IN BRIEF.

—Warmer, fair weather, and winds mostly southerly for this region today.

—Small-pox is spreading to an alarming extent among the Indians of the Northwest.

—A alert storm at Albany, N. Y., broke down the telephone and electric light wires last night.

—It has been definitly ascertained that 449 persons perished in the burning of the Ring Theatre at Vienna.

—The Japanese Minister and the ex-Minister of China will leave Washington next Wednesday for their respective homes.

—Grenville Murray, the author of "The Member for Paris," and a well-known journalist and sporting man of London, is dead.

—Another revolution has broken out in Santo Domingo, and still another in Venezuela. A revolution has just been suppressed in Hayti.

—The wholesale clothing house of Cohen & Seligman, of Atlanta, Ga., failed yesterday, with liabilities amounting to $46,000 and assets of $31,000.

—About fifty Treasury employés on what is called the "lapse" roll of the Treasury Department will be discharged on the 5th of January. Poor devils.

—Allen's Block and French's Central Hotel at Red Bank, N. J., were destroyed by fire yesterday. Loss about $40,000, only partly covered by insurance.

—Mr. Plosser, a check clerk in the office of the Alabama Great Southern Railroad at Birmingham, Ala., was killed by a man named O'Neal Thursday night.

—John F. Simpson was convicted yesterday, at Detroit, of the murder of his wife. The crime was committed last July, under exceptionally brutal circumstances.

—Sir Edward J. Reed, an English capitalist, has bought a controlling interest in the Florida Central Railroad, and was elected President thereof yesterday.

—A messenger lost yesterday on Wall street a loan envelope from the Bank of Commerce containing stock certificates to the amount of several thousand dollars.

—Levi Bishop, a prominent lawyer of Detroit, is dead. He was for a long time President of the Detroit Board of Education, and served as Regent of the Michigan University.

—The Signal-Service Bureau has about completed arrangements with the observatories in different parts of the country to secure time signals of the highest degree of accuracy.

—The post-office authorities at Washington are of opinion that Postmaster Keyes, of Madison, cannot be a Postmaster and a member of the Wisconsin Legislature at the same time.

—The Postmaster-General has decided that a wife's letter to another man, dropped into the post-office under suspicious circumstances, cannot be given to her husband by the postal authorities.

—Gens. Grant and Hancock, ex-Senator Conkling, Postmaster-General James, Hamilton Fish Jr., and several other distinguished people called on the President at his home in New York yesterday.

—Secretary Frelinghuysen has requested Chargé-d'Affaires Hoffman at St. Petersburg to thank the Russian Government for its liberal and generous conduct towards the members of the Jeannette expedition.

—Nicholas Smith, who married one of Horace Greeley's daughters, is an applicant for a foreign appointment. Mr. R. S. Blaine, brother to the ex-Secretary, has been appointed Newspaper Clerk of the House of Representatives.

—The steamer City of London, which sailed from London for New York on the 19th of November, and the steamer Henry Eder, which sailed from Antwerp for New York also on the 20th of November, are missing, and little hopes are entertained for their safe arrival.

—Col. W. H. Trescott and Walker Blaine arrived at Panama on the 13th inst. and sailed on the same day for Callao on board the United States steamer Lackawanna. They received the news of the death of Gen. Kilpatrick in Panama.

—The steamer Granger, with a cargo of cotton, resin, and turpentine, was burned in Charleston (S. C.) harbor last evening. The loss is placed at $40,000. The insurance amounts to $15,000. The passengers and crew were all saved.

—A new steamship company, to be known as the Ocean Steamship Company, has been organized at San Francisco. The vessels of the new company will conduct a general freight and traffic business between San Francisco and the Hawaiian Islands.

—The Monroe County (N. Y.) Land League has contributed $1,000 to the fund promised by the Chicago Irish Convention for the Irish Land League. Monroe County is the home of the Rt.-Rev. Bishop McQuaid, who has been denouncing the league.

—William P. Howard, Register Clerk in the Atlanta (Ga.) Post-Office, was arrested yesterday on the charge of embezzlement. On the 21st inst. one San Juan Hausacker, a mail-carrier, was arrested at Ducktown, Tenn., on the charge of robbing the mails.

—Miss Reynolds, a Lady Land-Leaguer, who was charged with aiding and abetting a criminal conspiracy to prevent the payment of rent, was ordered yesterday by the local Justices at Castleton, Limerick, to give bail to keep the peace for six months, or to go to jail for one month. Irish-like, she preferred to go to jail.

—A Pullman car conductor was caught by a customs officer at Montreal yesterday carrying in tickets for the company without entering them for duty. Mr. Brown, the General Superintendent of the Pullman Company, has arrived in Montreal, and emphatically denies that any smuggling has been carried on.

—Walpole's gambling-house was pulled by the Chicago police last night. Several of the habitués of the place were taken to the police station. It appears that Walpole has been advertising his place too extensively, which accounts, perhaps, for his place being pounced on while several others in full blast are not molested.

—The difficulties of the French in Africa are increasing. The troops which the Emperor of Morocco sent out to capture the rebel Chief Bou Amena fraternized with the rebels in proclaiming "holy war" against the French, and subsequently defeated the tribes who refused to join them. The rebellion is spreading, and the Moorish monarch is powerless.

—A memorial signed by 44,000, including forty-two Peers and seventy-five members of Parliament, has been presented to Sir William Harcourt, the English Home Secretary, asking for the release of the persons convicted recently of bribery in connection with the Sandwich and Macclesfield elections. Evidently the English peers and peasants do not greatly reprobate bribery.

—A Washington evening paper has just discovered that one McMullen, of Chicago, who is not wholly unknown here, obtained $7,200 out of the contingent fund of the Treasury Department for an alleged improvement in heating apparatus. It is stated that the money was paid on the recommendation of Mr. John B. Hawley, then First Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

—The West Side Railway Company intimate rather than promise that the spaces between the car-tracks will hereafter be paved with stone, instead of wooden blocks. President Russell Jones received a note from Mayor Harrison yesterday about the scandalous condition of the inter-track spaces. Mr. Jones' reply was that he had noticed the Mayor's complaints in the public press.

—Col. Moulton, who was at the head of the Sherman literary bureau before the Chicago Convention, will be given an opportunity by the Senate Investigating Committee today to state whether he has any knowledge about the source from which the price of the furniture of his offices came. It has been alleged that it came out of the contingent fund of the Custodian's office of the Treasury Department.

—The Liberal and Tory organs condemn the resolutions adopted by the Irish landlords' meeting at Dublin Thursday, demanding compensation for the injuries inflicted on them by the Land Commissioners, and that the State purchase their properties. The resolutions, it is claimed, show a weakening on the part of landlords and indicate a change of tactics. Donoghue, a land-agent, was shot at and dangerously wounded Thursday evening.

—The preliminary hearing in the trial of William Vance for instigating riot at Marion, Miss., on election-day, was proceeded with yesterday. The evidence of four witnesses, three white and one colored, went to show that the Vances and a colored man named Prince Palmer were the leaders in the murderous riot, and that after the affair was over Palmer expressed regret that more of the whites were not killed.

—An interesting account of the sorghum growing industry of Kansas for this year is given in our columns this morning. The season of 1881 was decidedly unfavorable for the growth of the cane, and the chinch-bug also committed great ravages, but for all that the industry has developed vigorously. New mills have been erected at many points, and the conviction is stronger than ever that Kansas is certain to take high rank in the production of native sugar and sirup.

—Additional discoveries have been made in connection with the downfall of Fred W. Newburg, Assistant Secretary of the Ohio State Board of Public Works. So far as ascertained, his forgeries and defalcations amount to about $8,000, but as the bewildered members of the board have only just begun to investigate, and are "all at sea" in their raking over of the accounts, it is impossible to tell how large the fast young man's embezzlement will grow before they get through with the books.

—Pigott, an ex-editor of a Dublin blackmailing sheet, has written a letter in which he says that Fenianism is practically extinct in America and in Ireland, and nearly so in Great Britain; that the "no-rent" manifesto has caused an almost exhausting run on the Land-League funds. He thinks that there will soon be organized attacks on the military and police, which attacks can be effectually stamped out, and the Land League with them. It is stated that an industrial exhibition will be held in Belfast as a demonstration of Belfast's loyalty. The police seized several hundred copies of the Land-League organ yesterday.

—There are enough members of the Elections Committee of the House now in Washington to form a quorum, and meetings will be held and sub-committees formed and put to work at once. The cases of Lynch vs. Chalmers, Lowe vs. Wheeler, Mackey vs. Dibble, and Small vs. Tillman have been selected for immediate action. These cases are said to be the strongest for the contestants, and there is every reason to believe that the sitting members will be ousted. Mr. Calkins, the Chairman of the Committee, said last night that he thought the committee would be requested to report the second week in January.

—The English are quarreling about the Lord Mayor's fund in aid of the Irish landlords. The Daily News, Liberal organ, charges the Lord Mayor with having made improper use of one of Gladstone's gushing telegrams, and says the fund is being subscribed more to embarrass the Government than to aid the Irish landowners. The Lord Mayor denies the impeachment, and protests his sincerity in a letter to the Governor of the Bank of England. The Duke of Marlborough contributes his share to the controversy, and declares his want of faith in any voluntary agency being able to supply the forces which are requisite to cope successfully with the state of disaffection and resistance to which Ireland has been allowed to drift.

A MONEY PACKAGE.

Mysterious Disappearance of Five Thousand Dollars from an Envelope While in Transit from One Town to Another.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 23.—There is so far no clew to the slick gentleman who a few days ago filched the contents of a $5,000 money package which was supposed to be in transit between this city and Bluffington, Ind., a meagre account of which obtained currency yesterday. The package was sealed up in the usual form and shipped by the First National Bank to the Bluffington bank. The package went through all right, but when opened in Bluffington was found to contain nothing but strips from newspapers cut the size of bank bills. The seals did not appear to have been broken, and there were no indications that the package had been tampered with. If such was the case, the job was very skillfully done. The bank officials say that by no possibility could the clerk who fill up packages have substituted the newspaper slips for the bundle of bills which had been handed him without being detected. They say that the package was all right when delivered to the express company, that they hold the company's receipt for it, and expect that the loss will be made good to them. The officers of the company, on the other hand, maintain that none of their clerks or messengers had an opportunity to open the package and seal it again so skillfully. The operation would require half an hour at least, and whoever did it, if it was done at all, must have known that the packages were coming, and supplied themselves with a seal of the bank. By a blunder in the transmission the package did not take the train intended, so that by no possible chance could the men who handled it know in advance that it was coming. The funds were ordered here to make good the loss, but investigations by detectives have satisfied the express officials that they are not responsible, and the order to make the loss good has been countermanded. This means that they hope to prove that the package contained nothing but newspaper slips when delivered to them. Special detectives are at work on the case, but they have obtained no clew, and will advance no theory.

A MOLLY MAGUIRE.

Further Testimony for the Defense in the McParland Trial at Uniontown, Pa.

UNIONTOWN, Pa., Dec. 23.—The defense in the Molly Maguire trial took further testimony this morning to corroborate the statement of their witness, Bridget Malory, that the McParlands were up above the scene of the murder at the time it occurred. Some twenty witnesses testified as to McParland's good character. The defense called John Lennon to prove that the hand-billy found in Dolan's coat was his. He stated that he boarded with Dolan's mother at the time of the arrest. When Dolan's mother was called she swore she sent to her boys in jail some of the clothes of her boarders by mistake, but Lennon was not one of her boarders at that time. Defense rested at 11 o'clock, and, after rebutting testimony by the prosecution, the case closed. In the afternoon the entire session was occupied in hearing arguments for the defense. Two motions, saying how the arguments will be taken, came in the morning and the arguments for the Commonwealth will then be made. The case will probably go to the jury at noon.

CRUMBLING TO PIECES.

THE DEFENSE OF GARFIELD'S SLAYER.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 23.—"I am not afraid to die. I would just as soon die if the Lord wants me to. If the Lord wanted me I would die on the gallows just as soon as I would by malaria or a railroad accident, or any other way. I am not afraid, and I eat well and sleep well." That is the way the braggart coward Guiteau talked in court today after an expert who has treated more than a thousand cases of insane people had pronounced him sane and entirely responsible. Guiteau for the first time has within the last few days given evidence by his manner that the tide has turned against him. He is impertinent and audacious, and brutally cruel in his treatment of Scoville as usual, but the swagger has been a little more subdued, and he has been more frightened as the cumulative evidence of the experts pronounces him sane. Today was a repetition of all the other days that have preceded it.

PUBLIC INTEREST IS NOT MAINTAINED

in the trial, the Christmas shops taking away a portion of the crowd. The court-room, however, was full, every seat being occupied, but there was not that tremendous crush which has made the court-room more nearly resemble the Black Hole of Calcutta than a place occupied by human beings. The speech which for some days Guiteau has been induced to omit he made this morning. It was a speech in which he apologized, as nearly as his brutal nature will allow him, for his abuse of Scoville, and introduced Charles H. Reed, of Chicago, to the Court as associate counsel. Mr. Reed scarcely needed an introduction, for he has been an attendant in the court-room nearly every day since the trial began, and has frequently given Scoville, privately, the benefit of his advice. Today he was recognized by the Court as a

COUNSEL IN THE CASE,

and took for a time a part in the cross-examination. His shrewd, incisive, experienced way of examining was in marked contrast to the manner of Scoville, but Mr. Reed did not remain throughout the day. He evidently will put more life and spice into the cross-examination than Scoville has, but Mr. Reed's cross-examination cannot change the opinions of the experts. The dexterity of no cross-examination is likely to be able to break the terrible force of the cumulative testimony of the experts that the prisoner is and was entirely sane. Guiteau sits there and struggles desperately with each new witness, to get some concession which may be for him a ray of hope. "Cannot a man be sane before and after an act, and not be responsible at the time the act is committed?" he asks eagerly of one expert. "May not a man be sane, yet at a particular time be deprived of his free agency?" he asks another. "Is not Divine pressure or inspiration sufficient reason to account for the crime?" he asks a third. "Cannot the act be explained by one familiar with has been one of his more recent questions. With spiritology the experts generally state that they are not familiar, and the wretch sits there seeing the tolls slowly gathering about him, and sometimes lashed into fury as an answer to a cross-question of Scoville only serves to bring the gallows nearer to his view. The prosecution proved by a witness, Edwards, that the conversation between Lawyer Shaw, of New York, and Guiteau in 1872, when Guiteau said that before he died he would imitate Wilkes Booth, and kill some prominent person. Edwards was a clerk in McLean's office and heard the conversation. He at the same time heard Guiteau propose a crooked real estate transaction, by which Guiteau was to be benefitted and others injured.

DR. SHELDON TALCOTT, of Middleton, N. Y., who is the Superintendent of an asylum, and who has treated more than a thousand insane patients, testified that he has thoroughly examined Guiteau at the jail and watched him in the court-room, and pronounces him entirely sane. Guiteau's shrewdness left him several times today when, he made statements similar to this: "I do not pretend to say, Mr. Davidge," speaking to one of the counsel for the Government, "that I am any more insane now than you are." Scoville's line of defense has been to show not that Guiteau was irresponsible at the time of the shooting, but that he is and all his life has been irresponsible and insane. Dr. Stevens, of Hartford, Conn., another medical gentleman of great experience in insanity cases, also testified in the most unqualified manner to Guiteau's entire sanity.

THE TRIAL.

PROCEEDINGS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 23.—Immediately upon the opening of court Guiteau desired to be heard, and, without any show of excitement, said: "It is said that I have been abusing Scoville. Now, the fact of the matter is, I want to make a speech about that. Scoville is doing very well in this case, considering his theory; but he is not a criminal lawyer. He is a fine examiner of titles. He can tell you all about your abstracts of titles. He is a good fellow, and a first-class examiner of titles, but I cannot have Scoville here consecrating my case. There is no lawyer in this court-room but knows he has asked questions for the defense which have been a positive injury to the defense. I cannot sit here when my life is at stake and have him compromise my case in this way. My friend, Charles H. Reed, who was for twelve years District-Attorney at Chicago, and a first-class lawyer, has very kindly consented to assume charge of this case, and I introduce him to your Honor. He is a good fellow. Scoville is a good fellow, too, and I want him to continue in the case and help in every way."

SCOVILLE EXPLAINS.

Scoville immediately arose to a personal explanation, stating the difficulties under which he had labored and his disappointment at not receiving the assistance he had expected from certain eminent counsel. He asked that the Court would pass upon the propriety of Mr. Reed assuming the active duties of associate counsel in this case.

Judge Porter thought it would be entirely out of place for the Court to be asked to rule upon such a proposition, and, speaking for the prosecution, promised no objection to Mr. Reed and no criticism of his course in becoming counsel for the defense.

Judge Cox—I think that sufficient. I have privately stated that I saw no objection to such a course on Mr. Reed's part.

Col. Corkhill—It's absurd to talk about it. Reed has been assisting all the way through, and has not been out of sight of the room.

Reed (quickly)—That is not true, Mr. Corkhill.

Guiteau—Oh, Corkhill can't tell the truth, anyway. Reed has quietly assisted just as scores of lawyers have done—in the interest of truth and justice. That's what we are here for.

ANOTHER SPEECH FROM GUITEAU.

After some discussion between counsel relative to striking out certain portions of Dr. Damon's testimony, Corkhill was about to call a witness, when Guiteau broke out excitedly: "There's a vast amount of rubbish getting into this case that has nothing to do with it. I want to know what all this has got to do with the condition of my mind on the 2d of July. You can't tell what is going on now in that foreman's mind, or Judge Cox's. How can you tell what was in mine on the 2d of July. All this nonsence about whether I'm insane now or was five years ago has nothing whatever to do with this case. [Striking the table and becoming more and more excited.] I can't get justice here. I expect an act of God for my protection. He has taken away the wife of one of the jurors, for which I am very sorry, and, if necessary, he will take one of those jurors right out of the box to save my life in the interest of truth and justice."

DR. SPITZKA'S LETTER.

Scoville explained in regard to the letter of Dr. Spitzka, opened and commented on yesterday by Guiteau. He stated the letter was addressed to him (Scoville) and not to the prisoner. He knew it would be commented upon by the prosecution, that Dr. Spitzka had written to a man he had said under oath was insane, and he (Scoville) desired the court and jury should understand just how it occurred.

WILLIAM A. EDWARDS, of Brooklyn, testified that he was a clerk in Shaw's law office, and overheard a conversation between his employer and the prisoner, when the latter, as alleged by Shaw, said he would some day kill some big man as Booth had done. Shaw had testified no one was present when the "Booth" conversation took place.

On cross-examination by Reed, the witness was asked: "If Shaw testified that no one was present, and you testify under oath that you were present, which of you told the truth?"

Answer—Why, I have told the truth. Shaw is apt to get excited when upon the stand.

The witness gave an account of a fraudulent real-estate transaction which the prisoner attempted to involve him (the witness) in.

Guiteau sneeringly commented on the ridiculous assumptions of the witness, and Scoville attempted to quiet him.

Guiteau replied: "I know what I'm doing. I'll take

MY CHANCE OF GETTING THE LAUGH ON HIM."

Mr. Reed questioned the witness at some length, and Guiteau interrupted, saying: "Why, this whole thing is a lie. My counsel are taking this matter too seriously. Call it by the right name, a lie, and let it go." Finally, he became very impatient at the length of the cross-examination, and called out petulantly: "Why, this whole thing is a farce. This fellow, ten years ago, was a clerk in Shaw's office, getting about $8 a week. The idea that I would consult him on a big real-estate transaction—such a numbskull as this fellow is—why, it is simply absurd, and Judge Cox ought to kick him off the stand."

DR. SPENCER H. TALCOTT,

Medical Superintendent of the Homeopathy Asylum for the Insane at Middletown, N. Y., had treated something over 1,000 cases of insanity. The witness had closely observed the prisoner and listened to his testimony on the stand. "Upon the assumption that he (Guiteau) was telling the truth in regard to the transaction, and in regard to the events of his life as he described them, I should say he was sane on the 2d of July." The witness also replied: "Assuming to be true the facts set forth on the hypothetical questions, I should say that the prisoner was sane on the 2d of July."

"HOW MUCH DO YOU EXPECT TO GET

for that opinion," shouted Guiteau; "if you've been here two or three weeks. I suppose you want five hundred [striking the table angrily], but I don't care a snap for your expert testimony, and I don't care if you bring in 500 such witnesses."

Judge Cox interrupted the harangue and commanded the prisoner to keep silence.

"All right, your Honor, I'll be quiet now," said Guiteau.

Davidge—Your Honor will please note that the "free agency" quoted by the prisoner operates all right now, as he can keep quiet when he wants to.

Guiteau—

I DON'T PRETEND TO SAY I'M INSANE

now any more than you are; but on the 2d of July and for thirty days prior I was insane. That's the issue.

Davidge—Then if you are sane now, you certainly know how to behave yourself.

Guiteau—I do know how, and I behave just as well as you do. I appear here as my own counsel, Judge Davidge, and have as much right to talk as you have. The amount of it is you have altogether too much to say on this case. You are as bad as a man born with diarrhœa. Now you keep quiet.

The witness did not believe it to be true that the prisoner acted under an insane delusion when he shot the President. If by inspiration in his case was meant "a happy thought" to commit the act, then he was inspired; in any other sense he was not.

Recess was then taken.

The cross-examination of Dr. Talcott was resumed after recess. He said he thought Guiteau in court attempted to exaggerate his natural tendencies, egotism, and irritability for the purpose of producing an impression of insanity; that it was possible for a man to commit murder when honestly feeling impelled by a power he was unable to resist, and when the act was against his natural feeling, and that such act did not prove insanity, so far as the brain was concerned, instancing the case of Abraham and Isaac and the people of the Ganges.

DR. HENRY P. STEARNS,

Superintendent of the Hartford Retreat for the Insane, was the next witness; from 800 to 1,000 cases of insanity had come under his supervision during the eight years he has been connected with the Retreat. The witness had made four examinations of the prisoner at the jail, directed to his physical and mental condition.

Guiteau interrupted, saying: "You came to me, Doctor, as a friend, and I, supposing you were going to testify for the defense, talked very freely with you about my religious feelings, and all about myself, but

CORKHILL'S MONEY WAS TOO MUCH FOR YOU.

I want to say here that I don't pretend that I am any more insane at this minute than Davidge is—I won't say Corkhill—for I think he is cracked [laughter], but I rest my case right on this claim—that I was insane on the 2d of July when my inspiration and the state of my mind impelled me upon the President. To make it short, that is all there is about it. I don't care what these experts say about my sanity now; that's got nothing to do with it."

The witness detailed at great length the results of his examinations and interviews with Guiteau. Pending the cross-examination, court adjourned until tomorrow.

THE MISSISSIPPI BATTLE.

Investigation of the Marion Riot on Last Election-Day.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

MERIDIAN, Miss., Dec. 23.—The case against Will Vance, for instigating the Marion riot, is still undergoing investigation. A witness heard Ed Vance say to his son John that "the thing will commence directly." Previous to the disturbance Bennett was walking about the crowd in a jocular mood, playing policeman. He had a stalk of sugar-cane in his hand. One witness went to Vance's house with a sheriff's posse, and notified the Vances that they had a warrant for Will Vance's arrest. He was answered with an oath and the words, "Shoot 'em," followed by a volley from the house. There were about twenty negroes there. One of the negroes who fired was Prince Palmer. Ed Vance and sons pursued the fleeing posse with guns. One horse of the posse was wounded. Another witness afterwards saw shot-holes in Hall Vance's house. A neighbor testified that he went to Vance's after the firing, and Will Vance said: "If you see them tell them we are ready for them again."

A colored girl testified that she saw Prince Palmer going from the riot, pistol in hand, with about twenty other negroes. Prince said to her: "If they had all stuck up like I did, and not got scared, we would have killed more of them than we did. We had enough ammunition to have killed a good many more of them."

Four witnesses were examined today, three white and one colored.

The trial progresses quietly. Few spectators are present, owing to the busy week.

MAYOR MEANS.

A Warrant Issued for the Arrest of Cincinnati's Chief Executive.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 23.—A warrant was issued this afternoon for the arrest of William Means, the Mayor of the city, for failure to comply with an order of the Board of Insecure Buildings. His Honor had left earlier in the day for the East, and the warrant cannot, therefore, be served until his return. The order with which the Mayor has failed to comply directed him to make safe the Felton Police Station, which stood near the Little Miami Railroad tracks, and is liable to fall down at any time, owing to the bulging of the walls, caused by the jar of passing trains. The Mayor's chief clerk states that his Honor was aware of the intention to cause his arrest, and that he remarked before leaving for the East that if that purpose was carried out he should fight the Insecure Building Board in the courts. In the Mayor's opinion he is not responsible for the condition of buildings belonging to the city. He holds that such responsibility rests upon the council, and he will seek to maintain this position in court. The council denies that it has ever been made the custodian of buildings belonging to the city, and declines to care for them. In the meantime the station-house is daily in use, and the community is haunted with the prospect of its some day falling down and burying police officers and prisoners in the ruins.

A LOAD OF SHOT.

That Is What Ended the Earthly Career of a Maryland Man.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

BALTIMORE, Md., Dec. 23.—Information was received here today of a tragedy near Winchester Mill, Carroll County, Md. Andrew Pfousch, the murderer, is a German basket-maker, and his victim, Jacob Lockman. Immediately after the murder, Pfousch surrendered himself to the authorities at Westminster, Md., declaring that he had shot and killed a man and wanted to go to jail. He then stated that he had killed one of his neighbors by the name of Jacob Lockman. Lockman's son passed his house on the way to school, and Pfousch said he had been in the habit of throwing stones at him and teasing him. This morning Lockman and the boy came by together, and both threw stones. He remonstrated with them, when Lockman picked up a large stone and came toward him in a threatening manner. Pfousch then got his gun, and, as Lockman still advanced toward him, fired the load of shot striking him in the abdomen, and killing him instantly. Pfousch was committed to jail to await the result of the Coroner's inquest.

DAVENPORT PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

DAVENPORT, Ia., Dec. 23.—The principal feature in connection with the closing of the public schools today was a novel and practical one. Two months ago the pupils were invited to exhibit in their respective rooms articles of their own manufacture made at home. The result has been a surprising one to the large numbers of visitors. Hundreds of articles representing the range of arts, mechanics, and industry have been shown, and many of them showed not only skill but original design. A partial enumeration will give some idea of the work presented. It comprised boat-building, needle and crochet work, knitting, drawing and painting, bread and cake making, shoes and slippers, candy manufacture, card work, wood-carving, lace work, picture frames, scroll-sawing, etc.

A RARE CHANCE.

Morgenthau Bros. & Co., 103 State street, corner Monroe, announce that they will offer, at precisely 6 o'clock p. m. this evening, the balance of their entire line of fancy and holiday goods at a reduction of fully 25 per cent of the marked price. For instance: An album which was sold for $5 before 5 p. m. will be sold for $3.75 after 6 p. m.; a handsome pair of candlesticks sold at $2.50 before 5 p. m. will be sold at $1.87 after 6 p. m., etc., etc.

A UNITED STATES STEAMER FIRED INTO.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 23.—A private letter received in this city yesterday from South America states that rumors are rife there that the United States steamer Alaska had been fired into and struck twice, damaging her so seriously that she had to return to Callao for repairs. Neither the State Department nor the Navy Department received any information on the subject, and the report is discredited.

COMMODORE WALKER,

Chief of the Bureau of Navigation and Repairs, says the report that the Alaska has been fired on is absurd, and that if there had been any foundation for it the Navy Department would have been so informed long before this. The rumor is reported here by letter, whereas, in the judgment of naval authorities, if there had been any truth in it the fact could easily have been communicated by telegraph.

ANOTHER CHAPTER.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 23.—In connection with the lately-printed report that the United States man-of-war Alaska had been used to carry a brother of Calderon to a Peruvian port with dispatches to some of the adherents of the deposed President, it is now known that the Chilian Minister here thus called the attention of Secretary Blaine to the matter under date of Nov. 10, saying: "It would not be unsuitable for your Excellency to become acquainted with a somewhat painful incident. Garcia Calderon intended to send to Areguipa as a Commissioner, asking permission for him to be allowed to land at Mollanda, which is now a blockaded port. Not being permitted to do so, the latter obtained a passport from the Chilian Col. Valdiniesa, on the pretense of visiting a different place. After obtaining the passport the Commissioner fraudulently altered it, in order that he might reach Mollanda safely. But this was not all. Having obtained permission from general headquarters to reach a blockaded port he did not avail himself of it, but, seeing that the United States man-of-war Alaska was about to sail to Mollanda, he boarded that vessel, and, after arriving there, to the rebels of Arequipa. Though I cannot vouch for it officially, I regard the story as sufficiently corroborated to warrant its publicity." In a subsequent letter to Secretary Blaine, dated Nov. 29, he says in regard to the protest of certain Peruvian chiefs against Chilian annexation: "The protest of all these chiefs against a territorial cession is established on the expectancy of American intervention, assumed by Minister Hurlbut, to whom Montemo has addressed himself as his immediate superior."

ONE OF HIS BROTHERS

DELIVERED MONEY AND CORRESPONDENCE

TARIFF TALK.

KELLEY OPPOSED TO MORRILL'S SCHEME.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 23.—An intimate Republican friend of Judge Kelley said tonight that he has personal knowledge of the fact that Kelley is opposed to the Morrill Tariff Commission bill, or any other bill of a similar character, and that the new Ways and Means Committee is beyond doubt anti-commission. The gentleman who made this statement, who is in a position to know pretty well the situation of the tariff question, is quite positive in predicting that some tariff legislation will be matured and reported during the present session. Even if the bill when reported should be strongly protective in character, it would give the House an opportunity for action of some sort, and the revenue reformers would have a chance to test their strength. This is all they can hope for during the present Congress.

TREASURY INVESTIGATION.

MOULTON.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

WASHINGTON, D.C., Dec. 23.—Col. Moulton, who was at the head of the Sherman Literary Bureau here during the last Presidential campaign, is to be examined before the Senate Investigating Committee tomorrow. It has been charged that the office furniture and stationery used by this literary bureau was supplied from the Treasury Department.

HAWLEY.

The Evening Star contains the following relative to this investigation: "The Treasury contingent fund investigation has brought to light the facts in regard to the payment of $7,200 for a new-fangled boiler, a scheme in connection with the heating of public buildings. This matter was mentioned in the Star at the time that the Moline Committee was at work under Secretary Windom. The Senate investigation shows that the $7,200 were paid to a man in Chicago named who held that his alleged improvement would be a great saving in coal to the Government. The improvement was perfectly worthless. The Senate committee, however, brings out a further fact, that the money was paid to McMullen upon the recommendation of J. B. Hawley, who was then First Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and a candidate for

M'MULLEN,

THE ILLINOIS GUBERNATORIAL NOMINATION.

It has also been shown in the Senate investigation that McMullen was able to all he could to secure that nomination for Hawley." Gen. Hawley left for Chicago yesterday, and his views as to this statement could not be learned. It is stated by those who ought to know, however, that John B. Hawley had left the department before this payment was adopted, and whatever may be charged in the investigation as to the methods by which the process was adopted, those who have it in use here do not say that it is worthless.

A LAND FRAUD.

IF MR. M'MAINS HAS A CASE HE IS BEING TREATED VERY BADLY.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 23.—Mr. C. P. McMains, of New Mexico, has been in Washington about six months, trying to have the steps taken to set aside a land patent which he and the settlers whom he represents regard as fraudulent as it is enormous. He almost despairs of getting any chance to prove the fraud. The facts, as he states them, are that the Maxwell grant is a fraud. It extends from New Mexico into Colorado. The grant was originally Mexican, but the fraud originated in the United States Land Office, as he claims. The Mexican grantees, Beaubien and Mirander, have made oath that their grant, which is the same as the Maxwell grant, did not exceed fifteen or eighteen leagues, or about 100,000 acres. This same grant now, however, covers 2,000,000 acres of the choicest mineral lands in the United States. Congress confirmed to

THE MAXWELL GRANT

900,000 acres more than the original grantees petitioned for. But, in addition to this increase, the present parties in interest, by the aid of the Government officials, have added to the original grant of 1,000,000 acres another 1,000,000 actually taken by fraudulent surveys. Mr. McMains claims he desires to prove this simply by the records. He will show, he says, for instance, that, according to the compilation of boundaries as confirmed by lawyers, the third turning-point of the boundaries of the Maxwell grant is opposite the junction of the Una DeGalo River with the Red River, while the third turning point of the present surveys is twenty-five miles north from the junction of any stream with the Red River; also, the fifth boundary is described in the Congressional grant as the "first hill south of Hayada River," while the fifth boundary point of the present survey is a mountain

TWENTY-FIVE MILES FURTHER SOUTHWEST

from the hill therein indicated. These facts can be proved from the record, and the settlers, whom Mr. McMains represents as a committee, desire to prove them. The patent was obtained in 1879, in spite of the protests of the settlers. The only recourse left was to have suit brought by the Attorney-General in the United States courts. But Mr. McMains finds a remarkable stumbling block in this office. He can get no attention paid to the matter, although he has the record, indorsed, as he believes, of the fraud. He represents 200 Mexican and American settlers. Mr. McMains' experience brings to his mind the report, which he has heard, that the land-ring has its agents everywhere where they will prove of service.

There is a hitch about the appointment of E. W. Keyes as Postmaster at Madison, Wis. The post-office authorities hold that he must resign his position as a member of the Legislature before he can be appointed.

GRANT'S SCHEME.

A projected corporation, of which, strangely enough, ex-President Grant is one of the charter members, is deeply concerned in the proposed modification of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. A little more than a year ago Engineer Menocal, of the United States navy, obtained a concession from the Nicaragua Government, by which certain citizens of the United States were given the privilege of building an interocean canal over Menocal's and Ammen's surveyed route last year, and this year bills were introduced in Congress incorporating the Nicaragua Canal Company. It will be necessary, the projectors of the enterprise think, to secure the abrogation or modification of the treaty in question as a condition precedent to the guarantee by this Government of the 6 per cent dividend on the cost of the canal sought for in the charter. A number of prominent public men are interested in the proposed canal.

The total redemption of bonds to date is as follows: Under the 105th call, $17,028,800; under the 106th call, $6,439,550.

JOHN PAUL JONES.

There were issued to-day, over Secretary Kirkwood's signature, twenty-seven pieces of bounty-land scrip to the heirs of John Paul Jones, a Captain in the American navy, in appreciative acknowledgement of brave and meritorious services in connection with the capture of certain British vessels of war.

A MAN'S WIFE'S RIGHTS.

A Postmaster wrote the Postmaster-General: "A man's wife dropped a letter in this office addressed to another man. The husband suspects something wrong. Shall I deliver the letter to him?" The Postmaster-General answered that the husband could not get the letter in that way.

NAVAL STUDENTS.

A complication having been made by cadet midshipmen at the Naval Academy for leave of absence during the Christmas holidays, the Secretary has decided that such students as desire to visit Washington Christmas may be granted leave of absence from Sunday morning till Monday evening, and no more.

ALL THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS will be closed Monday next, and Jan. 2. During Christmas week and tomorrow business will be generally suspended in the departments after 12 o'clock each day.

INTERNAL REVENUE COLLECTORS.

The Rollins bill, limiting the term of Internal Revenue Collectors to four years, is waking up the service all over the country. Probably three-fourths of the 125 Collectors in the country have served over four years, and many of them ten. The bill provides that the terms of those in office four years or more, on June 30, 1881, shall expire at that date. In Illinois, should the bill become a law, it will end the official career of nearly all Collectors. Collector Harvey, of Chicago, who gets $4,500 per year, was commissioned April 1, 1870, and if the bill becomes a law he will have to go. In the Aurora district Collector Croker will have two years yet to enjoy his $4,125 per year. The Quincy Collectorship, which pays $4,500, was filled July 1 of this year. Collector Knowles, at Peoria, has served since April 1, 1875, and his $4,500 per year will go to somebody else if the bill passes. John Hills has filled his $3,500 position at Champaign since March 1, 1876. Collector Merriam, at Springfield, has been drawing his $4,500 per year since Oct. 20, 1878, while Jonathan Willis, at Cairo, has held his $3,735 office since June 29, 1869.

LOTTERY GAMBLING.

Washington is much excited just now over several lucky lottery investments. The native population here seems much given to "bucking the tiger" in this manner.

A HIGH-PRICED RESTAURANT.

There is general complaint that the keeper of the Senate restaurant, selected by David Davis on the supposition that he would make reasonable prices, is higher than the downtown first-class prices, notwithstanding the fact that the Government furnishes the rent, fuel, coal, and furniture for the restaurant.

CIVIL SERVICE.

Pendleton's civil-service-reform scheme is attracting much attention, and over 20,000 copies of his speech have been ordered by parties outside of Washington. It is bracing up that gentleman's Presidential hopes not a little.

POST-OFFICE FIGURES.

The cost of mail transportation for the year ended June 30, 1881, was $19,333,890. The cost of the star service for 1881 was $6,987,855, a decrease of 4.97 per cent in cost compared with the amount expended during 1880. The appropriation for the year ending June 30, 1882, is $7,900,000, being $942,647, or 13.55 per cent, in excess of the cost of this service for 1881. It is thought that the estimate for star service can be safely placed at $7,250,000, a decrease of $650,000 from the appropriation for 1882, and $292,645 more than the rate of expenditure of June 30, 1881. In this estimate provision is made for new service that may be petitioned for and established after due investigation, looking to the requirements of the sections interested and postal facilities now furnished. Had no orders been made reducing the star-service, there would have been needed, at the rate of the past increases, about $9,000,000 for 1882.

Government by Editors.

New York Tribune.

Conkling seems to have made but little effort to form a Cabinet that would represent the groups of the majority. He recruited his political council mainly from the staff of his newspaper, making the financial writer Minister of Finance, the scientific contributor Minister of Public Instruction, the market reporter Minister of Commerce, the military and naval editor Minister of Marine, and the foreign editor Under-Secretary of Foreign Affairs.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

RALLY OF THE MAGNATES TO THE RESCUE OF THE GAMBLING FRATERNITY.

NEW YORK, Dec. 23.—From the Commercial Bulletin: "Share speculation was for the most part feverish and uncertain in tone during the early part of the day, although there were times when the stock market was weak, as after the appearance of the statements of business of such of Vanderbilt companies as had Directors' meetings today. These statements show that the railroad war has seriously reduced net earnings even of the best of them. These damaging facts have, however, been known for a long time to the insiders of these companies, and it explains why they have been so ready to sell them all the way down in a decline of 10 to 30, which stocks these companies have had since early last summer. There are now indications that these insiders are prepared to buy them back if the public choose to sell them. Among these indications are loans from banks and others made on the class of United States bonds held by Vanderbilt, the money being borrowed, presumably, to buy the stock. In fact, one broker who does little except for the Vanderbilts bought 10,000 shares of Lake Shore, and there are

OTHER SIGNS POINTING IN THE SAME DIRECTION.

Aside from this kind of buying today, the commission-houses had more orders from outsiders who pay in full for what they buy than they have had on any day for many months, and it is evident the recent downward movement has for the first time since its inception struck obstacles that may turn the movement in another direction. The chief sellers of stocks today were the weaker class of margin-holders and scalpers, or 'room-traders' for small turns. It is to be said that outside orders were mostly for substantial properties which pay dividends, and that "bottom specialties" were not wanted at any price, while the net result of the fluctuations in the general list was an advance of ¼@2¾, with the market closing strong. Specialties show a decline of 1@3¾, and were weak at the close. United States bonds were firm throughout, the only decline having been ¼ in 4s.

THE TREASURY

is getting very few bonds, the total offered today having been $53,000; but the shrinkage in prices at the Stock Exchange and the diminished demand for money there were alone sufficient to make money easy. Within two weeks it is known that the January disbursements will begin, and there will probably be from $60,000,000 to $75,000,000 of January income to be reinvested in securities dealt in at the Stock Exchange within the next six weeks. Foreign exchange today touched a point in actual sales of sterling at which gold can be imported, which indicates that stocks and bonds were today bought for foreign account, instead of being sold for the same."

ACTIVE AND FEVERISH.

From the Commercial Advertiser: "This has been another very active and feverish day in the speculative list, but the excitement was at no time equal to that of yesterday, and especially yesterday's closing, when matters betokened trouble today. But there have been no failures nor rumors of anybody in trouble, and a good many prominent broker firms report free outside orders for good dividend-paying stocks. On the whole, a much better support has been accorded to the market today than could have been expected twenty-four hours ago, although many stocks have suffered severely, and lower prices are predicted for next week. The severe effect of the trunk war is shown in the reports of the New York Central, Lake Shore, Michigan Central, and Canada Southern in a largely-reduced surplus, though it is not unlikely that the facts have been known to outsiders some time, and in part discounted. The general market closed strong."

TWO CLASSES OF BUYERS.

From the Post: "There were two classes of buyers of stocks today. One class was made up of outsiders of means, who have been distrustful of the market of late, but who have been tempted by the recent sharp decline to come in and take the better class of stocks, paying in full for what they buy, and transferring the stocks bought to their strong boxes. The other class was made up of professional speculators, who have forced the recent liquidation on the part of small 'bull' speculators, and the attendant decline in prices. The principal sellers of stocks today were weak holders, whose margins have nearly run out, and small professional traders or 'scalpers,' who make the most of their money by selling stocks 'short.' The 'short interest' in several of the leading stocks is large, as high as 1-32 of 1 per cent per day having been paid by borrowers for the use of several stocks. Money on Government bonds continues in ample supply at 3@4 per cent, and we hear of one large loan on United States bonds, the borrower having obtained money for buying one of the leading Vanderbilt stocks. All the reports of the Vanderbilt railroad companies which the railroad war has made on the net income of these properties. It must be remembered, however, that all this has been known to insiders for months past, during which time these stocks have fallen in market price from ten to thirty points. There are indications that now the facts are spread before the public the insiders are prepared to buy if the public wish to sell. There have been no failures in Wall street, nor are there reports of any, and the commission-houses report a great many outside orders for dividend-paying stocks. Other kinds are not wanted by buyers, who pay in full for what they want, and speculative specialties are shunned inside and outside the street, as if they were dynamite."

SHOW THE RAVAGES

A BRIDAL OUTFIT

SOLD TO THE HIGHEST BIDDER.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

NEW YORK, Dec. 23.—Messrs. Burdett & Denisa, the government auctioneers, sold at their salesrooms, No. 29 Burling slip, at noon today, a handsome bridal outfit made in Paris for a young lady in Milwaukee, Wis. The catalog embraced fifty-six lots, which were described as "elegant dresses of silk, and colored satin, and velvet, sealskin dolmans, underclothing, lace goods, table-linen," etc. There was a large attendance of buyers, including several ladies. The goods were seized from B. Leopold, a wealthy citizen of Milwaukee, who returned from Europe in the steamer Scythia on the 8th of April last. He failed to declare them dutiable. They were bought by him in Paris, and were intended as the bridal outfit of his daughter, who is said to be one of the belles and leaders of fashionable society in Milwaukee. They were decreed by the court to be forfeited to the Government, on the ground that they had been smuggled, and Mr. Leopold declined to reclaim them by paying the penalties incurred. Among the most expensive articles in the catalog were the following: Bridal dress of white satin, trimmed with lace, and embroidered muff to match, appraised at $600; dinner dress of maroon velvet, richly decorated, appraised at $400; evening dress of black satin, with lace trimming, appraised at $500; walking dress of plum-colored satin, appraised at $300; morning dress of blue cloth, trimmed with lace, appraised at $150; sealskin dolman, lined with flowered silk, appraised at $350.

MISS BERTHA LEOPOLD,

THE ARTICLES OF LINGERIE

included two pairs of white corsets, one silk corset, five pairs of extra long silk stockings, and two embroidered skirts. There were also thirty-eight pairs of four and eight buttoned kid gloves, lace collars, capes, shawls and ties, lace handkerchiefs, lace aprons, eighty dozen monogram handkerchiefs, one chenille shawl, two satin parasols, and a great variety of other articles of feminine wear. The entire outfit was valued at $4,000. The goods generally sold for more than the customs value.

OSCAR WILDE.

HE SAILS FOR THE NEW WORLD TODAY.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

NEW YORK, Dec. 23.—The chief representative of estheticism, Oscar Wilde, is to come among us after all. Enterprising managers, discerning the nimble sixpence in an engagement, have been negotiating with him some time past for an incursion into the American field, and the esthete himself has not been loth to consider the overtures for a public display of himself, with lily accompaniment. After a great deal of figuring and the customary denials of any contemplation on his part of a visit to this country by enterprising correspondents over sea, it is now positively settled that Wilde will be here, winds permitting, on the 2d of January. Mr. W. F. Morse, the business manager in this city for R. D'Oyly Carte, received word by cable today that Oscar Wilde will sail from Liverpool on the steamer Arizona tomorrow, Dec. 24.

HE COMES TO THIS COUNTRY

under an invitation from Mr. D'Oyly Carte, tendered him at the request of many of the friends of Mr. Wilde in New York, who are interested in the man and his writing. He has been accepted as the leading mind of the new esthetic movement. The strong individuality of the man, his expression in poetic phrase of these peculiar ideas, and the sayings and eccentricities attributed to him, have aroused considerable interest. His visit here is mainly for literary purposes, as he proposes to publish a volume of poems, as yet in manuscript, and will produce a play or tragedy in four acts, entitled "Vera, the Nihilist." He will probably give a public reception, at which he will hear an essay devoted to an exposition of the origin, progress, and development of the esthetic movement in England. It is intended to have Mr. Wilde present at the Standard Theatre on the night of his arrival here, and afford him an opportunity to see himself reproduced in the Pantorne of "Patience," and his first public appearance will probably be on the evening of Jan. 9.

PACIFIC MAIL.

NEGOTIATING WITH THE UNION PACIFIC.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

NEW YORK, Dec. 23.—The special committees of the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company are still negotiating, and a member of one of them said that it was probable a settlement of all existing difficulties would be reached by New-Year's. The railroad company, it was said, has announced a willingness to make such concessions as are necessary to bring the two organizations again into friendly relationship. The Pacific Mail people claim to be making more money under present arrangements than was possible under the abrogated contract by which $110,000 worth of freight per month was guaranteed by the railroad to the steamship line in return for the maintenance of rates. The railroad company, after breaking the contract, offered a guarantee of $75,000 per month in lieu of the old amount. This is said to have been increased since to $80,000.

MISSING STEAMSHIPS.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

NEW YORK, Dec. 23.—Nothing has yet been heard from the missing steamer City of London, which sailed from London for New York, Nov. 13. The agent here is despondent, but hopes she may yet be afloat. The steamship Henry Edye, which sailed from Antwerp Nov. 20 for Boston, is also missing. The agent here said today that the company hated to give her up, but the prospect for her safe arrival was gloomy. Her cargo is valued at $200,000 and the ship at the same amount.

NEWARK FINANCES.

In view of recent events in Newark, it is interesting to learn that of late the stockholders of the defunct First National Bank of Newark have been discussing the propriety of starting the bank anew. F. A. Palmer's name was canvassed at a meeting of the Directors as that of the cashier of the new institution, and was received with general favor. As Palmer is now in jail for embezzling a large sum while Auditor, it is presumed that the Mechanics' National Bank will have to look elsewhere for a cashier.

CARNE SECA.

Chambers' Journal.

This carne seca—dried or jerked beef—is exported to the amount of thousands of tons yearly from Montevideo, Rosario, and other parts of Uruguay and the Argentine Republic. In some of the saladeros or factories over a thousand head of cattle are killed daily in the season, one man being usually the executioner of the lot, and killing them by puncturing the spinal cord at the back of the head. The animals are cut up and the flesh piled in great heaps, with layers of salt, by semi-naked savages, half Basque, half Indian, who have a peculiar knack of causing the flesh to detach itself in flakes from the bone by giving it a slap with their broad, cutlass-like knives. Wonderful quickness and dexterity are exhibited in every department of the process, but the whole forms one of the most disgusting spectacles imaginable. Mixed with black beans and farina, or cassava-meal, jerked beef becomes the stable food of the lower orders throughout the coasts of South and Central America.

FROM BENNETT.

YESTERDAY'S TELEGRAM.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 23.—The State Department has the following dispatch from James Gordon Bennett with regard to the survivors of the Jeannette:

PARIS, Dec. 23.—The Hon. Frederick J. Frelinghuysen, Secretary of State, Washington: I have just received the following telegram from my correspondent at St. Petersburg concerning the Jeannette party:

General Ignatieff has given orders to send two new expeditions from Iakoutsk in search of the shipwrecked crew, and has directed that every available means be employed to find boat No. 2.

ON THE 25TH OF SEPTEMBER,

as has already been told, Melville and ten men were met by three Yakats. Yakats are good-natured nomads, very skillful in caring for disorders and maladies caused by the cold. The party

COULD NOT HAVE FALLEN INTO BETTER HANDS.

It must be remembered, however, that from Barchol, where they were discovered, to Iakoutsk the distance is 9,000 versts, or 1,400 miles, with no regular means of transport. At least twenty days were required to get there, but as those who went to the rescue started three days ago, the time necessary to find the party and bring them back to Iakoutsk would be

ABOUT TWO MONTHS.

Nor should it be forgotten that, although the whereabouts of Melville and his party is pretty well known, that of De Long, who sent forward Nendeman and Noras out of his party of thirteen, is not known, and that for a succoring expedition to reach him will take a long time over country where there are

NO ROADS.

The distance from Jakoutsk to Irkoutsk is 2,818 versts, or 1,900 miles, with a hampered postal which will require at least fifteen days to transport twenty-four persons. The Governor of Iakoutsk, Gen. Tschemajeff (not Gen. Tchernaiff of Servia), will receive the instructions of the Government and orders for fresh expeditions in eight days, by courier extraordinaire, traveling 250 miles a day. There will be then, from the Jeannette party themselves in less than three months, as the telegraph-wire does not extend beyond Irkoutsk.

NO FURTHER NEWS,

FROM IRKOUTSK TO ST. PETERSBURG will take them probably a month, traveling as rapidly as possible, although they will probably be at St. Petersburg by April, and in New York by May. This is all the information I have received to date. In case the Government should wish to communicate directly with the Jeannette, I beg to say that Gen. Anoutchine, Governor of Eastern Siberia, is now in St. Petersburg, but that his representative during his absence is with whom you can correspond direct. In case any further news is received, I shall at once inform you.

GEN. PEDASHENSKI,

JAMES GORDON BENNETT.

SCHWATKA.

WHAT AN ARCTIC MARINER THINKS.

PORTLAND, Dec. 23.—The Oregonian will publish an interview with Lieut. Schwatka regarding the cruise of the Jeannette. He believes she wintered at Liakhov Islands, or near by on the Siberian coast, passing en route south of Wrangell Land, which would account for no traces of her being found by the Corwin or Rodgers. Her previous discoveries cannot be inferred from her position when lost, but

MAY BE EXTENSIVE AND INTERESTING.

De Long did not follow the axis of the warm Japanese current north of Behering's Straits, which should be done before that avenue is condemned as impracticable. As to the return of the party, the route suggested by Kennon seems the most sensible. Probably his instructions to make a northeast passage a secondary consideration led De Long to make no attempt to reach the land due in the direction of the Parry Archipelago. His retreat in boats is in the history of abandoned Polar vessels. Schwatka puts no faith in the reports that the Russians withheld information concerning the Jeannette. The result of the expedition is a severe contradiction of the belief that a good Polar route can be formed by following the channels through the ice of the great Siberian rivers and ocean currents, and leaves but little doubt as to the fate of the lost American whalers, the Vigilant and Mount Wallastin, which is

ONE OF THE MOST MASTERLY-MANAGED ESCAPES

AS TERRIBLE AS THE IMAGINATION COULD CONCEIVE.

Should the loss of the Jeannette be coupled with that of the English exploring yacht Eira, under Leigh Smith, the tendency of the advocates of Arctic exploration will be looked on with less favor than the more hazardous but probably more successful methods of aerial navigation. The Jeannette's fate will also tend to discourage the proposed coasting commerce to the mouth of the Lena. He thinks this disaster will tend to forward the idea of using ships merely to carry expeditions to proper starting points, and serve as a secondary basis of supply.

MRS. DE LONG.

NO NEWS.

BURLINGTON, Ia., Dec. 23.—Up to this hour Mrs. De Long has no advices different from those already given to the public. It is believed it will be some time before De Long's party can be heard from after the relief party reaches him.

THANKS.

THE RUSSIAN GOVERNMENT THANKED FOR ITS ASSISTANCE OF THE JEANNETTE'S CREW.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 23.—The following was sent today:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 23.—To Hoffman, St. Petersburg: Convey the thanks of the President to the Imperial Government for its liberal and generous action in advancing the necessary funds to render assistance to the members of the Jeannette expedition, and inform Mr. Degeire that you are authorized to draw on me to reimburse that Government, if it will kindly inform you of the amount.

CASUALTIES.

An Accident in Which the Pennsylvania Railroad Magnates Took Part.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Dec. 23.—A passenger train from New York ran into the rear end of a freight train near Holmesburg this evening. The engine and several freight cars were considerably damaged, and the tracks blocked several hours. The passenger train, drawn by Engine No. 16, left New York at 3:45. The damage amounts to about $10,000. The accident, it is said, was caused by the freight pulling out when it should have waited for the passage of the passenger-train. No one was injured. Among the passengers were President Roberts and Vice-President Cassatt, of the Pennsylvania Railroad. When the engineer saw the freight-train pulling out into the main track he reversed the engine and put on the brakes with such force as to throw the passengers out of their seats. A purse was made up for the engineer, who remained at his post.

IOWA FREE-TRADE LEAGUE.

DES MOINES, Ia., Dec. 23.—The State Free-Trade League met today and adopted an address to the people of the State, and also adopted the following platform:

"We believe (1) that the only commercial policy which can be made permanent and unchangeable, and therefore consistent with stability in all kinds of business, is absolute free trade; (2) that the only tax on imports which should ever be tolerated by a free-trade people is a tariff for revenue only; (3) that the greatest burden now borne by the American people is the unjust, unequal, and iniquitous system of taxation called a protective tariff. We therefore demand the immediate and gradual reduction of existing import duties, (4) be steadily continued until every protective feature is eliminated."

THE GARFIELD FUND.

CLEVELAND, O., Dec. 23.—The aggregate of the large subscriptions by citizens of Cleveland for the Garfield monument fund now amounts to $64,325; small contributions to $27,600; total, $91,925.

FINANCIAL.

Heavy Operations in Stocks Yesterday at the Philadelphia Exchange.

No Panic, as Was Falsely Reported, but an Exceedingly Lively Time.

Suspension for the Second Time of a Wholesale Clothing Firm of Atlanta, Ga.

The Flurry at Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 23.—The stock market opened this morning quiet and lower. Pennsylvania sold at the first boards at 51; Reading, 23¾; Lehigh Navigation, 42; Buffalo, Pittsburg & Western, 30; Northern Pacific common, 35; preferred, 72; Northern Central, 51½; and Philadelphia & Erie, 19½. The market gave way early in the day, but rallied towards noon with a promise of greater strength, which was controlled throughout by New York quotations.

AT ABOUT NOON

it again began to break sharply, in sympathy with Wall street. There was some excitement, but it did not amount to a panic, as reported. At this time the market was exceedingly feverish. What aided in promoting the disturbance was the announcement of two small failures and a general fear that further suspensions would follow. Fortunately, no further trouble occurred, and by 2 the market began to recover in tone, the bears bidding up prices against each other. At the close a much stronger feeling prevailed, and competent observers on the street entertained hopes that the disturbance had culminated. Final prices in several instances were higher than the opening figures.

THE CLOSING QUOTATIONS were as follows: Northern Pacific common, 34⅝ bid, 35 asked; do preferred, 71⅞ bid, 72¼ asked; Buffalo, P. & W., 19½ bid, 19¾ asked; Pennsylvania, 49½ bid, 49¾ asked; Reading, 23½ bid, 23¾ asked; Lehigh Navigation, 42¼ bid, 42½ asked; Northern Central, 51½ asked.

THIS WAS WITHOUT EXCEPTION

the heaviest day in the stock market since last July, and prices recorded were the lowest of the year. Sales aggregated about 73,000 shares.

Auditor Palmer, of Newark.

NEWARK, N. J., Dec. 23.—Another warrant for $3,000 was discovered forged by City-Auditor Palmer. Palmer writes that Frank B. Allen, a lawyer, has had no sort of connection with him in any of his wrong doings. Palmer says: "On one occasion, upon Frank B. Allen appearing at my office to collect a certain amount of, damages, I secured his signature to the warrant-book in four places in blank, upon the plea that I was called to my lunch, and that I would fill in the blanks on my return and that in this case I procured four signatures in settlement of the case, whereas virtually but two were required. Allen left for the Treasurer's office with his warrant to draw the money. I then filled the two remaining spaces with the particulars of another warrant fraudulently procured, upon which I drew the money, and applied it to my own use."

Failure of a Wholesale Clothing House in Atlanta, Ga.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

ATLANTA, Ga., Dec. 23.—The wholesale clothing house of Cohen & Selig threw up the sponge today and made an assignment to Isaac Haas. The liabilities are $40,000, with $31,000 assets. This is the second time that this firm has failed in business. The first failure was in July, 1878, when the liabilities were about $70,000. Haas, the Assignee, attributes the second failure to an effort upon the part of Cohen & Selig to pay more than they were really able to on the former suspension, the amount being between 60 and 80 cents on the dollar. In July of the present year the firm reported assets of $45,000.

TRESPASSING.

Conviction of a Wisconsin Man for Cutting Timber on Government Land.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

MADISON, Wis., Dec. 23.—An important suit has been in progress in the United States District Court here for two weeks past, involving the trespass case of H. B. Mills, of Millston, in this case the charge being that defendant had cut timber on a number of Government forties near Millston. Eminent counsel have been engaged both for the Government and the defendant. Lieut.-Gov. J. M. Bingham assisted United States District-Attorney Lewis, the defendant being represented by Vilas and Bryant, of this city, and J. M. Morrow, of Sparta. The case was given to the jury last night, they returning a verdict today of $2,000 and costs, amounting in all to $2,168. On most of the subdivisions charged as being trespassed upon the jury found the defendant guilty on some of them by an act of Congress allowing trespassers to enter lands trespassed upon prior to 1878. Under the instructions of the Court, the defendant, having entered them after the trespass, which was the most valuable part of the land, was found not liable. The jury found that the Government agent who investigated these trespasses—Col. George A. Henry—was correct on almost all of the charges of trespass on the subdivisions reported.

STILL AT LARGE.

Failure to Capture the Convict Who Escaped from the Pennsylvania Penitentiary in a Shoe-Box.

PITTSBURG, Pa., Dec. 23.—James W. Miller, the prisoner who escaped from the penitentiary yesterday by secreting himself in a shoe-box, is still at liberty. Two ex-convicts, named Charles A. Street, alias Aims, and W. R. Robison, have been arrested for aiding and abetting him in his escape. On their persons were found papers and diagrams of various places throughout Western Pennsylvania which they intended robbing. It is thought these men are members of the gang who have been operating so successfully in Western Pennsylvania and Eastern Ohio for the past few months.

PENNSYLVANIA INDEPENDENTS.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Dec. 23.—The Committee of Independent Republicans has completed an address to the Republicans of Pennsylvania. The document refers to the great work accomplished by the party, and adds that representative conventions of the State should reflect and record the will of the party rather than the decrees of a political junta, which has been the result recently. The party to succeed, it is said, must have speedy deliverance from the tyranny of personal dictation. The object of the Independent Republicans is to send good men to the State convention soon to be held, so that proper nominees shall be placed before the people for their suffrages.

IMPENDING STRIKE AT RACINE.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Dec. 23.—The trunkmakers at Racine, Wis., will strike next Wednesday because of the discharge of a member of the union from one of the factories. The strike will include about all the trunkmakers.

A BREWERY SEIZED.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Dec. 23.—The Monroe County Land League contributes $1,000 to the special fund promised by the recent Chicago Irish Convention.

THE MYSTERY SOLVED.

Some time ago the papers contained an account of the mysterious disappearance of a sachel containing jewelry valued at $1,000 and the property of Mr. and Mrs. Brownell, guests at the Burdick House. The sachel had been deposited with one of the clerks for safe-keeping in the vault. Once Mrs

THE I.-O. says that Senator Logan makes all the Illinois appointments. It that be so, will the I.-O. now join THE TRIBUNE in insisting that the appointing power shall be restricted to the President, where the Constitution vests it?

MR. NIXON will live to learn that sometimes the sorest disappointments are blessings in disguise. If he has failed to clinch the Collectorship he has secured what is better—his own emancipation from servitude to ungrateful "Stalwartism." There is nothing so disgraceful in journalism as to see the conductor of a leading paper in a great city playing spaniel to, and wearing the collar of, any professional politician. It degrades the profession to have such members in its ranks, and it is a pleasure to them to assert their manhood even if they are snubbed and kicked into doing it.

THE recent declaration of Prince Bismarck that during the last twenty years Italy has made, and is still making, a steady advance towards republicanism has aroused great excitement in the political world of that country. The Liberals recognize it as a sop thrown to the Ultramontanes, and reply that monarchical principles have been greatly strengthened during the past five years, and that even those who are stigmatized as Republicans by the monarchical extremists are unswervingly loyal. The Ultramontanes, on the other hand, are jubilant over Bismarck's declaration, and, of course, recognize in it a condemnation of the political tendency of Italians and a recognition of the political importance of the Catholic Church.

THE steamer Westphalia, which arrived at New York from Germany Thursday evening, had on board 1,200 immigrants infected with the small-pox. All these people intend to come West, and most of them will of course pass through Chicago. Dr. De Wolf, on hearing of the intention of the New York health authorities to permit the immigrants to proceed West, telegraphed an indignant protest, and immediately communicated with Mr. Rauch, of the State Board of Health, who promised to cooperate with the Chicago health officers to prevent the immigrants from the infected vessel from coming to this city until all danger of the spread of the infection had passed. The State authorities will endeavor to establish quarantine at the State line, but in the event of their failure Dr. De Wolf still has the power under the city ordinances to stop the train-loads of infected immigrants one mile outside the city limits, and this will undoubtedly be done.

THE New York Tribune is responsible for the following statement:

How hard pressed the American navy is for vessels to perform necessary cruising service may be judged from the fact that the department is taking a wooden hull, which has been on the stocks at the Brooklyn yard for nearly twenty years, and preparing to launch and furnish it. The live-oak timbers are found to be sound, and, although the vessel is not such a craft as would be built now, she will carry guns and a flag, and be better (but not much) than nothing to represent the United States in foreign waters.

If this be a fair indication of the actual condition of the American navy, it seems pertinent to ask what has been done with the $15,000,000 to $18,000,000 which have been appropriated every year for the maintenance of a supposititious navy. If this sum has been extracted from the Treasury annually in order to support a large line of ornamental officers and unemployed seamen, who could be of no service in any emergency because of the absence of seaworthy ships, it would seem to be advisable to sell off the old iron and wood lying idle in obsolete ships, discharge the force now kept up, close the navy-yards, and abandon the pretense of a naval establishment. If the people are to be taxed $16,000,000 a year for a navy, they ought to have one if they have no navy, they ought not to be taxed to support one.

SENATOR Van Wyck, of Nebraska, says that his resolution directing the Senate Committee on Public Lands to investigate the cause of the failure of so many titles in Southern Nebraska, by which settlers have been dispossessed with the loss of all the improvements made on the lands they supposed their own, is made necessary by the action of the St. Joe & Denver Railroad Company and their assigns, who now claim lands which the Government had conveyed by patent. It is claimed that the decisions of the Public Lands Division of the Interior Department have been grossly unfair to settlers and very partial to the land-grant railroads. Senator Van Wyck thinks that the settlers should be protected. If they are not Mr. Van Wyck will, he says, be forced to the conclusion that American citizens are treated worse than the Irish peasantry by the landlords and the laws of England. The sub-committee, which consists of Van Wyck, McDill, and Grover, will investigate the case of the Southern Nebraska settlers and others during the recess, and will perhaps hold a session at Lincoln, Neb., on the 30th inst. From present appearances it is more than probable that the true inwardness of the decisions of the Public Lands Division of the Interior Department in favor of the railroads will be discovered.

NO DUTY SHOULD EXCEED FORTY PER CENT.

The Congress of the United States has before it a duty which cannot be postponed nor shirked without a betrayal of the public interests. There is on the statute book a schedule of tariff taxation on consumers that is appalling. It is without justification or palliation. It is on hundreds of items extortionate and scandalous, and instead of applying the machinery of legislation to the revision and correction of this scheme of robbery the majority of the Senators and Representatives are industriously seeking to avoid the duty by appointing a mixed commission of Congressmen and so-called outside "experts" to report to Congress next year, or the year after, a general tariff law. This is one proposition to gain time. Another and even more indefensible proposition is to appoint a commission of outsiders, and have them, some time during the next two years, report a new tariff scheme, to be taken up or not some years later. Again both of these schemes the general public should protest. The duty of Congress is to act on others the exclusive business of Congress. It is not constitutional for Congress to delegate its powers to any other body of men. We would say, after reading the above, that it was written by a man who had been a [illegible] Democrat" and a "Feather-bed Democrat" ever since the tinkling inaugurated war upon President Garfield, and that the newspaper in which the paragraph appeared has been engaged for years in telling the public that Senator Logan is a dangerous man who ought to be put down. A stranger would scarcely be persuaded to believe that the person who caused that paragraph to be written was an original third-termer, a spaniel-like follower of Senator Logan, a consistent Arthur at all times, a supporter of Arthur right or wrong, and the most persistent and loud-mouthed "striker and blower" for the "minority faction" which he now denounces as likely to "demoralize the public service and disintegrate the party." It is astonishing how the loss of a local office [illegible] the deep-rooted convictions of years. It is very plain that Nixon has made an ass of himself. While trying to run a newspaper he ought not to have truckled to Acting-President Arthur, or Senator Logan, or any other officeholder through thick and thin. While trying to manage a daily newspaper in a great city he ought not to have identified himself and his paper with a "minority faction" which had no other raison d'etre than a greed for spoils. While trying to publish a newspaper he ought not to have prostituted himself and his paper by begging for office. And when trying to operate a newspaper or not, he ought to have more self-respect than to turn upon and abuse his associates and superiors in his chosen faction, because they did not regard him as sufficiently useful to them to warrant the gift of the Chicago Collectorship. He might at best have borne his discomfiture with silent dignity, and not instantly have exposed the hollowness of his previous pretenses by blubbering like a baby. As it is, Nixon has cut loose from the only faction which would consent to tolerate him and his newspaper; has made a public exhibition of his spleen and malice; and will now do the "minority faction," consisting of President Arthur and Senator Logan, more service by abusing them than he was ever able to do while he lauded them. Nixon's whine inspires contempt rather than pity, and ought to be a new warning to those who aspire to rank with newspaper men not to go office-hunting.

A SOUTHERN PROTEST AGAINST ILLITERACY.

It is a cheering sign of the times and a good omen of peace in the South that so able and influential a journalist as Mr. Watterson, who has heretofore been something of a rhetorical enthusiast, has at last awakened to a realizing sense of the importance of education as a powerful motor in advancing the true interests of his own State. If other men of equal prominence and influence in other Southern States were to take the same high position it would be better for that section.

From Mr. Watterson's article we learn some astonishing facts. There are nearly 300,000 of the children in Kentucky of school age who are not attending any school. In 2,500 school districts there is no semblance of a school taught at all, "and it will be found that in the majority of the remaining districts there may be schools, but a good deal of fearfully bad teaching." The money appropriated for school purposes has been decreasing regularly during the past ten years, and, says Mr. Watterson, "by a piece of palpable injustice or indifference, even the small per caput of $1.35 is not given to all. The negro school population is cut down to half that sum, a state of affairs for which no member of the present Legislature, or any previous Legislature since 1870 can give a satisfactory answer." These alarming statistics are concluded with the declaration that there are 60,000 voters—or one in four—who cannot read or write! In alarm and despair at such a showing as this, Mr. Watterson says:

Such a record of illiteracy means more crime throughout the State, more pauperism, more taxation, more penitentiary room. It means disgrace for our State unless the sensitiveness of our good citizens recoils from the brand of shame, and they are led to appreciate the vast and solemn importance of taxing themselves to the full extent allowed by the law to put up school-houses in every one of the six or seven thousand school districts, employ first-class teachers at living salaries, and see that every child who does not receive instruction at a private school is taught nine months out of the year in the most effective manner. This is a duty which must not be evaded.

Mr. Watterson makes no attempt to conceal the truth. He places the condition of things in Kentucky fairly before his readers and appeals to them in the following ringing words: "Let citizens who know what a damnable thing illiteracy is and can be awaken and see that it is strangled by school-houses."

If this be the state of things in Kentucky, bordering so closely upon the North, and subject to Northern influences, a State which has usually been considered one of the best educated in the "South," what must be the density of the darkness in States farther towards the equator? If there are 60,000 voters in Kentucky who can neither read nor write, how many ignoramuses must there be in such States as Arkansas, Alabama, Mississippi, and Texas? If there are 2,500 school districts in Kentucky without a school, in close proximity to a section of the country which has a school-house at almost every cross-roads, how vacant of school-houses must the Cotton States be? If the negroes are cut down to 67½ cents per caput in Kentucky, what must be the size of the pittance allotted to negroes in the cotton country?

Mr. Watterson has done well to call the attention of his State to its shocking and disgraceful illiteracy and the dangers growing out of it. Almost every condition of its growth and success depends upon universal education. It may not prevent entirely certain evils not peculiar to but abundant in that section, such as impecuniosity, intemperance, and penitentiary crimes, but its tendency is to reduce them. It may not make a laboring man out of a lazy loafer, but it will enable those who do labor to work more intelligently and effectively and earn more money, or money's worth. It may not suppress all the evils that prey upon modern society, but it will reduce them. It may not make a reformer out of a voter, but an educated voter is not likely to be led by the nose by designing Olly Gammon demagogs. It may not make the South a Paradise, but it will immensely improve its condition morally as well as materially, awaken and develop efficient industry, restore quiet and order, reestablish the reign of law, break up the vendetta and shotgun raids, and suppress bulldozers, bush whackers, and banditti. Mr. Watterson has made an eloquent and strong effort to dissipate the dark cloud that hangs over Kentucky by introducing the district school-house, and he has set an example which other eloquent and influential men in the Southern States can follow to great advantage.

JUDGE CRAIG AND THE "CRIMINAL LAWYERS."

A correspondent stated in the columns of THE TRIBUNE a few days ago that the modes of criminal procedure in Illinois were entirely satisfactory to the "successful criminal lawyers." A partial proof of this assertion is furnished in the communications of two of the ablest of them—Messrs. John Lyle King and Emery A. Storrs—printed in another column this morning. These eminent criminal lawyers have rushed to the defense of Judge Craig against what they deem an "unfounded aspersion." They believe he is an admirable Judge. They know he just suits them. They would be very sorry to see him defeated for reelection. Nothing could please them more than to have the Supreme Court made up of seven Judges like him. Every "successful criminal lawyer" in the State will probably be of their way of thinking.

While THE TRIBUNE does not wish to interfere in the controversy between those eminent criminal lawyers and "Justice," nor would it indorse all that "Justice" said, yet it feels constrained to say in behalf of the people that it makes no practical difference whether Judge Craig listened favorably to a motion for a rehearing in the interminable Friedberg case, or whether he granted a stay of proceedings to permit a motion for a rehearing to be entered and argued. What he did do—and this is beyond dispute—was to pronounce the opinion of the Supreme Court in the case of Friedberg, and to affirm the decision of the court below in the following clear and conclusive language:

1. CRIMINAL LAW—Receiving stolen goods for gain—On the trial of one for receiving stolen goods for his own gain, knowing that they were obtained by burglary, one of the burglars testified that he assisted in the burglary and went to the defendant's place of business (liquor saloon) under the direction of a prior arrangement with the defendant, and the other unobjectionable evidence showed that the defendant knew such witness to be a professional thief, and that the goods, being fine silks, were taken to the defendant's place at an unusual hour of the night by suspicious characters, one of whom he knew to be a thief, tied up in suspicious bundles and promiscuously thrown into a one-horse wagon, and that on discovery of the unloading of the goods by a policeman he left, and had not, upon trial, and afterwards denied being present, and made other contradictory statements in regard to the matter, and had shortly before told a customer to call in a few nights, as he expected to get some silks then. Held, that the evidence very clearly sustained a conviction, and corroborated the testimony of the accomplice, whose character was infamous.

Judge Craig, having delivered this most emphatic opinion, had the discretion to grant a stay of proceedings to permit a motion for a rehearing to be argued. That is not denied. If he had not such discretion he could not have given the stay. The point is, that it would have been no abuse of discretion for the Judge to refuse to grant the stay to this branded felon. Having held Nov. 11 that the evidence "very clearly sustained a conviction," he would have been excused for not holding Nov. 30 that there was "probable ground for a rehearing." His liberty was as wide on one side as on the other. He chose to exercise it for the benefit of the convicted criminal and against the people. After all is said and done, the great fact remains that Friedberg, covered all over with proven crime, has not yet been sent to the penitentiary, notwithstanding the strenuous efforts of the State's Attorney, though his offense was committed more than three years ago, and the evidence against him was as clear as noonday.

THE SILVER QUESTION IN ENGLAND.

The London Times of Dec. 8, commenting on the President's message and the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, quotes the latter's remarks in regard to the right of the American Government to pay its bonds in silver as well as gold, and adds:

The "silver craze," which became so dangerous a power in the financial policy of the United States towards the close of the period of depression, has for the present ceased to be formidable. It is one of those follies which find sustenance in the general discontent engendered by "hard times." It is not, however, extinct, and Mr. Keifer, the new Speaker of the House of Representatives, is said to be a believer in "cheap money." The possible revival of these disquieting theories, should there be a reaction from the present prosperity of the States, is a reason for persevering in that policy of clearing off debt from which President Arthur's Administration is apparently inclined to recede.

One would think from the above extract that the designs of the "silver men" had been pernicious, but were defeated by the more conservative sentiment of the country—in other words, that the so-called "silver craze" was of very much the same character as the "fiat" money lunacy. As a matter of fact the silver men accomplished all they desired, and the existing prosperity of the country undoubtedly owes something to their influence.

It was discovered that silver had been surreptitiously dropped out of the American monetary system. The fact had been concealed from the general public for some years. The people demanded that the double standard be restored, and the demand was made with so much earnestness and power that Congress did not dare to resist it. A law was passed over the President's veto providing for the coinage of not less than two millions a month of standard silver dollars. The minimum amount has been coined, and there are now about $100,000,000 of standard silver in circulation, partly in coin and partly in the shape of certificates of deposit, in addition to $50,000,000 of subsidiary silver. If there was any "craze" about this, there is no danger of its being "revived," because it has not died out. It is altogether likely that, in case there should be "a reaction from the present prosperity in the States," the actual presence of silver as debt-paying money would avail to avert much of the suffering incident to the long period of depression which followed the panic of 1873, and the silver resources of the country would notably assist in the maintenance of specie payments. The paragraph we have quoted simply shows how badly this silver question is understood in England; the "craze" has been in successful operation for five years, and yet the London Times is apprehensive of its "revival." Every bond that has been issued during that time is subject to payment in the double specie standard, by law and by right, but the English capitalists have been more anxious than ever before to secure these American bonds, even at a high premium and at a much lower rate of interest than had been paid previously. Practically, therefore, the "silver craze" does not seem to be so terrible a thing as the Times evidently conceives it to be. And just as we finish writing the article we find this cablegram, London, Dec. 23:

At a meeting of bankers and merchants of London yesterday a resolution was passed in favor of the formation of an association to consider the rehabilitation of silver, and Henry Hucks Gibbs, one of the Directors of the Bank of England, was chosen President of the council.

This indicates that England is likely to experience a "silver craze." It is slowly getting through the skull of John Bull that there is not gold enough "to go round." Other countries in Europe caught the idea sooner than Britain. The steady annual drain of gold from Europe to this country has helped to quicken the perception of Old-World financiers to the fact that the time is close at hand when silver will have to be rehabilitated as money, and an international ratio must be affixed between it and gold. The American method of employing silver through certificates of deposit may eventually become universally adopted, as it will obviate all objection to the use of silver as money based on weight or clumsiness of handling and carrying in the pocket in common use. There is none too much gold and silver in the world for the fiscal use of mankind.

THE President, we believe, is anxious to harmonize the discordant elements of the Republican party, but it is difficult to see how he can do this by placing all the sinews of warfare in the hands of the leader of one faction, and refusing to consider the complaints of the other.—L.-O.

With the exception that we no longer believe that the "President is anxious to harmonize the discordant elements of the Republican party," we fully agree with our esteemed contemporary that Arthur is "placing all the sinews of warfare in the hands of the leaders of one faction," and that the minority one, and we are glad to see that our neighbor is coming to a realizing sense of the situation. We have often told it that "Stalwartism" had degenerated into spoils-grabbing, in which the bigoted "Stalwart" hog secured the most swill. We fully agree with our calm and disinterested contemporary that the evil policy inaugurated by his Accidency of placing the control of the Government in the hands of men representing a minority and defeated faction of third-termers "will demoralize the public service and disintegrate the party, and will eventually result in its inglorious and complete defeat," unless the thing is stopped and changed. We are glad that the publisher of the L.-O. has finally got his eyes open so that he can see matters in their true light, and we welcome him and his journal to the growing ranks of civil-service reform.

WE have a Senator in our midst. It is true he has never been elected to any position by the people of Chicago, and it may be doubtful whether he could be so elected, but to him alone the powers at Washington look for advice and counsel in selecting local subordinates in Chicago. Indeed, if the reports of his friends are true, this superior being scarcely deigns to advise and counsel, but rather dictates to the President and Cabinet what they shall do for Chicago. Some innocent might say that the voice of the people ought to be more potent than even Senator or Congressman, but under this rule it cannot make itself heard. It is buried a thousand fathoms under the stentorian tones of the Senator.—Inter-Ocean.

This will strike the average "Stalwart" as strange language, coming as it does from one of Gen. Logan's most obsequious henchmen—we were almost going to say supporters. Our sincere advice to Nixon is to get out of the "Stalwart" camp as quickly as possible, unless he is willing to be court-martialed and shot, for he is guilty of rank treason to the powers that be.

A "STALWART" said yesterday after reading the I.-O. that Pennixon would convalesce rapidly now since he had discharged so much bile, and that after the holidays he would feel so much better that he would again crouch down like Issacher's ass between his two burdens of Stalwartism and third-termery.

DAN SHEPARD, who has borne the heat and burden of party service for many a day, and is a defeated candidate for the Chicago Collectorship, does not tear his hair and rend his garments over his grief, as does his ex-Stalwart brother, Pennixon.

NIXON lays the heft of the blame of his defeat for Collector on Senator Logan. But this is not fair. Dan Shepard was the Senator's choice. It was Arthur who appointed Jesse Spalding. Why go on abusing John?

IF the I.-O. keeps right along in the road on which it started yesterday it will have THE TRIBUNE for a fellow-traveler.

LAKESIDE MUSINGS.

"I shall hang up my pants."—Dr. Mary Walker.

"Will My Darling Come Again?" is the title of a poem sent in by Marion Howard. We don't know, Marion, but you might send him word that the dog is tied up, and see.

"Remember the old saying, my son, 'You will never miss the water till the beer gives out,' and resolve that while the glow of youth is in your cheeks, and your brain is clear as the crystal waters that shimmer in the glad sunlight as they leap from the rocky fastnesses of the Yosemite and plunge headlong into the seething torrent below, that you will never knowingly allow yourself to get out of beer."

"I promise, father," said the boy, lifting his clear, blue eyes to those of this man who loved him so well, "you can bet your life on that."

Two years later that noble boy was married, and his father, who could drink a brewery to a standstill, was living with him.

He had pronounced his own financial doom.—From "Beer, His Bier," by Murat Halstead.

The editor so gay
Is feeling well today,
Because of poems he has burned a score.
He's tilted back his chair,
His feet are high in air,
And he's ready to incinerate some more.

A step is on the stair,
The editor's red hair
Begins to rise like quills on porcupine.
His face a dreadful frown
Assumes, his feet come down:
He's a kind of human giant-powder mine.

In steps a pretty maid,
Her hair is just the shade
Of summer sun that gilds the lofty spires.
She's pretty and piquant,
"Whatever can she want?"
The editor soft of himself inquires.

"I came, sir," she begun,
"To ask you if I can
A Christmas story for your paper write.
I don't want any pay—
My name is Myrtle May—
I'd like to stand on Fame's immortal light."

"O, Myrtle," he replied,
"You'd better be my bride;
I'm lonely since the trotting season's o'er.
As wife of one who writes
Of ball games and cock fights
You'd have of fame a quite sufficient store."

The maiden fled; and now,
The editor, I trow,
Doth daily play that little game of his.
He knows girls cannot stand
His locks of auburn, and
The quarter-stretch expression of his pais.

See the Stocking. How nice and large it is. Will it be full Christmas-Eve? No, but the Man who owns it will.

The Snow is falling. See how lazily the white flakes drift through the air. Snow comes only in Winter. When else comes in Winter? Tom and Jerry.

Who is the Man with the Spade? It is John Kelly, and he is digging up the Hatchet.

What a large Bell. A Man rings it at 4 o'clock every Morning to call the people to early mass. It saves them the expense of buying Clocks, and, besides, all the other people who are awakened know exactly what time it is. How kind of the Man to ring it so much an early hour.

Who was the first man? Adam. Who was the first woman? You are wrong again, Tommy; Gail Hamilton lives in Maine yet.

Why does the Lady look so Sad? Perhaps her little child is dead. No, but she is out of caramels, and it is Raining very hard.

Here we have a Young Man. He is looking at the Large House, which belongs to a Gentleman who has a Daughter. Will he go in? Yes, if the Dog is tied.

Count Kalnoky, the new Austro-Hungarian Foreign Secretary, is among the youngest of the statesmen of Europe. Prince Bismarck is 58, Mr. Gladstone 72, and Prince Gortchakoff 83. Count Kalnoky was born in 1832, and is of the same age as Count Ignatieff. He is six years older than M. Gambetta, and seven years younger than Count Andrassy.

Prof. Willard Fiske, of Cornell University, is now making a tour of the principal Eastern cities for the purpose of visiting their libraries in order to note wherein Cornell's may be wisely and suitably augmented. After the close of the present college year Prof. Fiske will deliver no further lectures and have no class duties, but will devote his whole time to the interests of the university's growing library. The fund left by his wife for the improvement of the library will be at his disposal, subject to the sanction of the university's Executive Committee.

An attendant at the telephone station in the Rue du Bac, in Paris, recently opened communication with another station, and was awaiting a reply, when a volume of flame and smoke issued from the tube containing the wires. The fire quickly spread to the walls of the room, and was not extinguished until considerable damage had been done and several sets of apparatus destroyed. On the matter being investigated it was found that a workman in a sewer under the Boulevard St. Germain had accidentally burst open a gas pipe, and so set fire to the inflammable covering of the telephonic wires running alongside. The flames spread rapidly, and thus reached the office in the Rue du Bac.

Olive Logan, writing of the Marquis of Lorne as he appeared as an after-dinner speaker recently in England, says: "The young Scotch noble has greatly changed since he left these shores to assume the Viceroyalty of the domain to the north of us. His bearing at that time was that of a shy, aristocratic, almost frigid youthful noble, whose only conception of a fine manner is an essentially cold and unimpassioned one. Now, on my word, he seems like an American 'of ours.' He is jovial, hearty, off-hand—I had almost written, slap-dash. The Princess seemed to take the greatest pride in his success as a speaker, and gave him many loving smiles of approval as he expatiated on the evils of smoke."

Timber Regulations for the Northwest.

OTTAWA, Dec. 23.—A new code of timber regulations for the Northwest Territory has been promulgated. Mr. Thomas Anderson, the Timber-Inspector for the Northwest, will be vested with discretionary power to deal with questions arising under the Crown timber regulations without reference to Ottawa. Permits will still be required by persons cutting timber, but it is understood they will be chiefly formal, and for the purpose of preventing waste, and to keep wood in the control of the Government until the lands are surveyed and entered upon. The cost of a permit for a settler's building material is 20 cents, and rails cut for use on the place, and not for purposes of sale or speculation, free; and firewood for one's own use free; cordwood cut for sale will be subject to a charge of 15 cents per cord; cutting timber to hold for speculation purposes without first obtaining the necessary permits, and destroying timber before the land is entered for, under the pretense of clearing the land for cultivation, are absolutely forbidden. The Inspector has been instructed to take every precaution against waste.

The Finance Minister's Obnoxious Circular.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

MONTREAL, Dec. 23.—The agitation here is still very great over the circular of the Government to the banks. Not only bankers but commercial men also are strongly opposed to giving the information regarding the names of customers, and it is likely some action will be taken to make a public protest. It is stated that prominent friends of the Government have written to the Finance Minister asking him to withdraw the obnoxious part of the return. All the leading banks deny emphatically that they have been contravening the Banking act by lending on bank stocks. The stock market was again excited this afternoon, and a further fall in prices took place. The general feeling is that the market at present is in a critical state.

A Question of Sanity.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

TORONTO, Dec. 23.—John T. Probert is in the Police Court charged with insanity. It is said that the doctors differ as to his case. The jail surgeon says he is sane, and the Rev. Dr. Castle says he is insane. Others who know him well think he is cranky, but there are many madder men at large. His mind has become somewhat affected by reading scientific works which he has not the capacity for considering impartially. His trouble is with his wife, who does not like his materialistic notions. He in turn suspects her of all manner of wickedness. The case is likely to develop some interesting features. Probert was in the asylum before, and claims that he was put there through the machinations of his wife.

The amount paid up already is 50 per cent.

FREDDIE NEWBURG.

A Poor Sort of a Chap to Trust Money With—Further Revelations of His Crookedness—He Was "a Bonanza for the Girls."

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

COLUMBUS, O., Dec. 23.—Further investigation into the accounts of Fred W. Newburg, the Assistant Secretary of the Board of Public Works, today developed additional forgeries. Three vouchers in which the name of Amos D. Lisk were forged in June and August last, aggregating $3,000, were discovered today. The Board is all at sea, and can't say where the thing will end, or how much of the State's funds have been contributed to the support of fast women, wine suppers, and the turf. Now that the exposure has been complete, the stories of young Newburg's escapades are being told by those who have heretofore been as dumb as oysters. A hundred dollars per night at a half-dozen houses of crooked repute in this city was regarded as a matter of course when Freddie was on one of his explorations. Upon being questioned as to how he could stand up under the burden, he told his friends that his clerkship amounted to nothing, that he had other sources from which he received money, and, singularly enough, his high standing and previously good record succeeded among those who had taken interest enough in his case to refer to it in some instances. The Board of Public Works are confounded for having in their employ a young man living so notoriously a reckless life. In this connection it should be said that the board do not reside at the Capital, but come here monthly for the purpose of settling up the business of the previous month. On all such occasions young Newburg was at his back, and in him the members were with one accord in the belief that in their accountant they possessed a treasure. The surprise party of yesterday and today, however, has fully demonstrated the fact that young Fred was getting the treasure, while the board were only gaining experience. His books were balanced with those of the Auditor of State each month, and so correct was he in this respect that there was never a cent's variation in the accounts of the two departments, the balance, of course, being a forgery. For the last two years since young Newburg started on his reckless career, and it now seems quite probable that the forgeries have been carried on during the entire period. His home is most elegantly furnished, yet his household expenses were nothing in comparison with the luxury in which he surrounded himself in the gilded palaces. At two houses in this city he supported for his exclusive pleasure half-a-dozen creatures, bedecked them in diamonds, gave skin suppers, and other associated entertainments, and gave them big presents. He was a bonanza to the girls of the town, and it was the exposure of a greenback by one of these pets that first found out the exposure. Had young Newburg been down quite so high it is not at all probable that there would have been a suspicion of his doings entertained. As it now seems probable, the forgeries have been carried on for two years, it is hard to tell at all imposible they could have been continued for years to come without detection had not the two rivals for his attentions and money exposed him in the manner referred to. There is much more than hinted at on every hand why young Newburg did not leave for Canada after the first publication intimating that there must be irregularities in his accounts. He was in possession of a sufficient amount of funds, and had he not been, it is a well-known fact that his friends would have supplied him. He did not go, and they been called upon to do so, it is argued by some that he would have refused, as he not been nearly crazed with drink. It is argued that there is a ring which has been drawing heavily from State funds, and that young Newburg has only followed in the path marked out by others, and that he was detected in the fact that, in the event he was found out, he would surely follow. Since the exposure young Newburg has undergone a change for the worse. In addition to his salary, and money he could raise, he has been in the habit of borrowing money of his friends, and he is still lies in the corridor of the city prison very sick, but far more satisfied than yesterday. His grief-stricken wife visited him today. The meeting between father and mother are still pronounced by grief and sorrow. It now appears quite likely that the prisoner will waive examination and go to jail rather than remain in the city prison. It is understood that rich relatives will bail him out as soon as he recovers and the amount of bail fixed.

THE MICHIGAN SUFFERERS.

An Appeal for More Help for the Victims of the Great Catastrophe.

PORT HURON, Mich., Dec. 23.—The people in the burned districts of Michigan is as follows:

The winter wheat is looking very fine, but has been injured, especially during the late weather of the past week, by the trampling of cattle and their feeding upon it, owing to the lack of fences. The shelter for the people is very destitute. The shanties are generally built of upright boards of green lumber, about sixteen by twenty feet, no chimneys, and, in favorable cases, battened on the outside, and no partitions on the inside, compelling the whole family to sleep in one room. The families are partially supplied with furniture; have a reasonable quantity of bedding and a full supply of clothing. The supply of provisions will probably last until the middle of January. The committees having charge of furnishing supplies, the proposed monthly distribution of money will not be adequate to furnish the necessary provisions and groceries. A general destitution may be expected at the end of January, sickness in consequence of the exposure during and after the fire, is on the increase, owing to the insufficient and crowded shelter. This question will require the serious attention of the committees. The resident physicians have done much work, and should more will be required of them. The spiritual wants are well attended to by the pastors of the various denominations. Many of the clergy have been very active in attending to the spiritual wants of the sufferers and relieving them. In the matter of hay, oats, and feed for stock, the amount purchased and on hand will reach till about the 1st of February. Feeding will have to be continued until the middle of May. The number of the sufferer now is, if that shall be with the 1st of February, he will have to be provided for the spring sowing. Owing to the increased area of burned land, a great amount of grass-seed will be required, in the usual quantity of spring wheat, oats, rye, barley, and buckwheat seed. Potatoes will also be an important item. After a careful estimate, we think the amount of money on hand will carry the people and stock up to Feb. 1, at a low estimate, and by cutting down the number of families from 4,000, as appears on the lists, to 1,500 families who are utterly destitute, and will have to be provided with everything, it will require $200,000 more to provide for absolute necessaries.

While we are reluctant to call for more, and appreciating the great generosity shown by the people, we cannot do less than present the situation as it is, leaving the sufferers in the hands of those who have till now so bountifully provided for their current wants. D. E. C. CHEADLE, Mayor, Chairman of the Port Huron Executive Committee.

PROHIBITION IN OHIO.

Confusion Reigns Supreme in the Ranks of the Lunatics in the Asylum.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

COLUMBUS, O., Dec. 23.—Since the close of the recent political campaign in Ohio it has become apparent that the old original Prohibitionists of the State were not at all pleased with the outcome of the management of their cause as conducted by the leaders of an organization styled the Temperance Alliance. There flocked to the standard of the alliance many were old politicians, broken down or expelled prominence, who, through the alliance, were given temporary life during the campaign. It was the hope throughout the campaign that the alliance would be but little less than an organization of slanderers and blackguards. Through a consolidation of the two wings of the Prohibitionists it was claimed that they would be able to poll a vote of not less than 100,000, which it was hoped would defeat the Democratic party and election Gen. Foster. The results were, however, without avail, the Democrats by a majority being increased heavily.

PIGOTT.

DUBLIN, Dec. 23.—Pigott, former proprietor of the Dublin Irishman, publishes a letter in which he says Fenianism is practically extinct in America and in Ireland, and nearly so in Great Britain; that the "no-rent" manifesto has caused such a run upon the resources of the Land League that they must soon be exhausted, and that probably a general adoption of the "no-rent" policy will lead to such exasperation that there will be organized attacks on the military and police, which attacks can be effectually stamped out, and the league with them.

BELFAST.

It is stated that the industrial exhibition will probably be held at Belfast, as a demonstration of loyalty.

"UNITED IRELAND."

The police have seized 300 copies of United Ireland, dated Dec. 24, in various parts of the country, having a Dublin imprint. It is stated they were printed in an Abbey street office, where some of the copies were seized. The police deny this, but refuse to say where the paper was printed.

THE LORD MAYOR.

LONDON, Dec. 23.—The Daily News publishes copies of telegrams sent by Gladstone to the Lord Mayor at the time the fund for the defense of property in Ireland was being inaugurated, in which the Prime Minister expressed a belief that an association for the purpose indicated would be a justifiable movement, but that advice from the Government as to English aid involved many other considerations, and would be likely to do more harm than good. The same journal, in a leading article, charges the Lord Mayor with allowing a false representation of the purport of the telegrams to be used by the Tories, and says the Mansion House is little more than a party demonstration against the Government, and that the Lord Mayor is more anxious to damage the Government than to help the landlords. The Lord Mayor has, consequently, addressed a letter to the Governor of the Bank of England stating that the object of the fund is to uphold the rights of property against organized combination to defraud, and to sustain liberty of contract and liberty of action. The Duke of Marlborough, replying to a circular from the Lord Mayor asking his cooperation as Lord Lieutenant of Oxfordshire in the movement for the defense of property in Ireland, gives his consent, but disclaims faith in any voluntary agency being able to supply the forces which are requisit to cope successfully with the state of disaffection and resistance into which the country has been allowed to drift. The Lord Mayor's fund for the defense of property in Ireland amounts to £7,000. The fund for the relief of Irish ladies in distress has reached £10,000.

SHAW,

member of Parliament for Cork County, in a letter to the Secretary of the Home-Rule League giving his reasons for withdrawing, says the time is inopportune for a discussion of the question of home-rule. The league as now constituted is unfitted to move with any effect. Of the two parties comprising the league one remain loyal to the original program, that of securing self-government by constitutional means; the other declares the country has outgrown that program, which declaration, as explained from America, means the foundation has been firmly laid for an Irish republic. Shaw says he is unable to belong to an association with such aims, but expresses the opinion that the union, as it exists, has not fulfilled its promise. The only solution of the Irish difficulty will be a measure of federalism, with which he maintains the leading statesmen will be prepared to deal in a generous manner when the state of public feeling permits the question to be approached.

Dr. Brown-Sequard at the Paris Sorbonne.

Paris Correspondence of The Chicago Tribune.

M. Paul Bert is represented by a deputy who is a well of science, but does not know how to draw a crowd of intellectual hilers. His auditors diligently take notes. Dr. Brown-Sequard has genius, knowledge, intuition, enthusiasm, and something without. He is one of the most celebrated men of the Sorbonne. He has published more than a hundred volumes on physiology and physiology. M. Paul Bert is the Jordan of vivisection. Dr. Brown-Sequard is the Moses. His curiosity is devouring, and all roads lead to the chaudet. It is entirely unknown for a burning desire to be the least combination of such intellectual and moral faculty, and to make a full and complete atlas of the brain and nervous centres. This physiologist goes to his work with the keen eagerness of an old huntsman who is beating a well-known game. He wants to solve the perplexing problems which the Sphinx typified thousands of years ago.

Dr. Brown-Sequard is the grandson of Irish emigrants to America, and the son of an American naval officer who was probably massacred by pirates and of a French creole lady. He was born in the Mauritius, where he learned to speak French as a child and English as a schoolboy. There is the warmth of the Irishman in his oratory. The scientific facts which he is always trying to master appear to feed his fancy as well as to enrich his intellect. Russians and Bonmanians are greatly drawn toward Dr. Brown-Sequard. But the Russian students need not like to think too much about the experiments. There is much torture in the Russian woman for the laboratory animals. It does not show itself in puerile sensibility, but in a kindness which makes me think that but for the severe climate of Russia Buddhism would have spread there from Asia.

TERRORS OF A FOX BITE.

The Duke of Richmond's Awful Death While Governor-General of Canada.

London Telegraph.

As an evidence that the bite of other animals is sometimes as dangerous as that of a dog, we may adduce the well-known case of the grandfather of the present Duke of Richmond, who was Governor-General of Canada in 1818, and died there in the August of 1819 from the effects of a fox's bite. The story was elaborately told by the late Lord William Lennox, in his "Fifty Years of Biographical Reminiscences," and is well calculated to warn careless readers of a not uninteresting volume against the danger of putting their hands within reach of a so-called tame, but really wild and chained-up, fox. We are informed by Lord William Lennox that his father had determined on a tour of inspection to the Upper Province of Canada, and, after a farewell banquet to his civil and military subordinates, the Duke set off in the midsummer of 1819 from Quebec in a Government steamer, whose head was pointed up the St. Lawrence River. Lord William accompanied his father, on whose staff he was serving as military aide-de-camp, as far as Montreal, whence the Governor-General made his way to Fort William Henry, lying on the south bank of the great Canadian stream. "Here, says Lord William, occurred an incident of a most fruitful nature, which totally changed the aspect of our subsequent happy residence in this distant colony. It appears that one of the English soldiers at Fort William Henry had a pet fox, and that an officer there, named Capt. Fitz Roy, owned a bull terrier, between which and the fox there had been several fights. The fox was in a highly-excited condition on the day when the Duke happened to take notice of him, and just before mounting his horse to inspect the garrison he rashly stooped down to pat the fox on the head. The animal instantly snapped at the Duke's hand, inflicting him slightly, upon which he took hold of the fox's ear, exclaiming: "You'll bite, will you, you rascal!" The brute at once seized him near the lower joint of the right thumb, making his teeth meet in the flesh. Little was thought of the incident, and when the Duke arrived at Kingston a fortnight later the wound had completely healed. He proceeded from Kingston to York—now called Toronto—and thence went to Niagara, and on to Drummond's Island, upon Lake Huron, then the most distant of our military outposts in Canada. On his return he staid some days at Kingston, and had himself entirely forgotten that he was ever bitten by the fox. The Seventieth Regiment quartered at Kingston, among the Duke took part with the officers in all their amusements, playing at cricket and rackets, and riding out with them frequently. It had been arranged that on his way back to Montreal, a new settlement or township named Richmondville should be visited, and a tract of land marked out under the Duke's supervision. For this purpose, as there was no carriage road, and only a small portion of the distance—thirty miles—could be accomplished on horseback, it became necessary that the vice-regal party should proceed on foot. During the last two and a half months the present Governor-General of Canada, Lord Lorne, has traversed a couple of thousand miles, traveling westward, with greater ease and far less fatigue than the pioneers of Canada endured when called upon sixty years ago to journey from Quebec to Lake Huron.

On the occasion to which we are referring a large and merry party set out from Kingston, and among them none was gayer or seemingly in better health than the Governor-General himself. He walked nearly the whole way to Richmondville without fatigue; but one night, just as dinner had ended, he limped suddenly to Col. Corbin, who was seated by his side, and remarked: "I don't know how it is, but I can't relish anything tonight as usual, and I feel that if I were a dog I should be shot for a mad one." The words were little regarded, but upon the following morning the Duke's symptoms became aggravated. He could not drink, and shrank from the sight of water. He was prevailed on to walk to the river-side, in order to get into a canoe, and exclaiming, "Charles Lennox was never afraid of anything," he stepped, not without a considerable effort, into the boat. The sound of the plashing oars and the sight of the running stream, however, soon brought on an acute fit of pronounced rabies, and, seizing one of the rowers frantically by the throat, he demanded to be put on shore. No sooner had the boat touched the land than the Duke sprang out and ran at the top of his speed into the woods. Col. Cockburn, who was on horseback, rode after him, and, assisted by one of the boatmen, managed to carry the sufferer to an adjoining farm, where he was laid on a sofa. Here the ripple of the water was distinctly audible, and he begged to be moved further away from the river. He was taken to a house hundred yards distant, where he was placed on a bed of straw. He now grew more calm, called for writing materials and wrote a letter to one of his daughters. He seemed perfectly resigned to the fate he knew was approaching, and recognized the faces of the friends who stood anxiously by his couch. Toward the close of the day he was seized with shivering fits, and his extremities became icy cold. He remained perfectly conscious, awaiting the end with tranquillity, although suffering intolerable tortures, and about 8 o'clock in the evening breathed his last. Never did the death of a distinguished Englishman awaken more agitation or regret among his compatriots than that of the fourth Duke of Richmond in 1819, unless, perhaps, it was that of the young Duke of Dorset, who a few years earlier had been instantly killed by a fall from his horse while out hunting at Killiney Hill, near Dublin. More than sixty years have passed since the Duke of Richmond's lamentable death, and since that time the bite of a rabid animal has lost none of its terrors for humanity; nor have physicians and surgeons come to arrive at a distinct understanding among themselves how a wound thus inflicted may best be treated. It is true that chloroform and other anæsthetics have robbed hydrophobia of some of its horrors, as the paroxysms of madness in a patient may be controlled and made painless by rendering him unconscious. The dread malady, however, is still with us, and we can only trust that Dr. Cameron and those who agree with him in believing that it is curable may shortly be in a position to give us assurance of the practical truth of their sanguine theories.

A MUSICAL PRODIGY.

The Performances of Cesarino Galeotti, an Italian Boy, with Some Account of His Career.

I have twice heard this week, says the Paris correspondent of the London Truth, the pianoforte improvisations of an Italian boy, who will probably take in some years a foremost rank among the great composers of the age. This boy is just 9 years old. His name is Cesarino Galeotti. He is a native of Pietragutta, in the Province of Lucca, and has come here with his father, who is provided with letters of introduction from the Grand Chamberlain of the King of Italy and other Italian personages. Today Cesarino played the organ at vespers in the Cathedral of Notre Dame, at the request of the organist, M. Lefebure Wely. The youthful Galeotti is not only a child, but looks one, and resembles, but favorably, Master Humbert and the Princess Clotilde. He has still the round cheeks of infancy, but the upper part of his head is phenomenally developed, and projecting far out both in back and front. The bands appear of almost babyish size, and are too small for long chords. But their dexterity on the piano keyboard is almost bewildering. Cesarino Galeotti is not one of those unfortunate Italian children who are sold to impresarii and taught by dint of cruelty to outrun nature. He is a little world-looking about the eyes, but grave in the impression of a boy whose childhood has been a happy one, and he appears very fond and not at all afraid of his father, with whom he is making a tour round Europe. Signor Galeotti is a very gentlemanly Italian, and of a good middle-class family, as the numerous letters of introduction he has with him testify.

The child, of whose musical accomplishments I can only give a very limited idea, has studied four years under Prof. Castrucci, of Pisa, and Sgambati, of Rome. The second occasion on which I saw the prodigy was at a déjeuner which preceded an informal children's party. Cesarino was set down to the piano, and all kinds of music were given to him. One could see that he was longing to play with the children. To draw them to him he ran away from a sonata, which he got through in the most brilliant manner, to a queer sort of capriccio, made up of discords and chromatic runs, one could have said had been inspired by a visit to the Zoo. They flocked around him, to his unconcealed pleasure. Then he played duets with several little girls, some older than he, and others about his own age. The result was a given to the small maidens. His fingers to their musical level, and yet the most remarkable of his feats. No consciousness of his superiority was betrayed, or impatience shown at essentially inferior performers, and anything without. He is one of the most celebrated men of the Sorbonne. He has published more than a hundred volumes on physiology and physiology. M. Paul Bert is the Jordan of vivisection. Dr. Brown-Sequard is the Moses. His curiosity is devouring, and all roads lead to the chaudet. It is entirely unknown for a burning desire to be the least combination of such intellectual and moral faculty, and to make a full and complete atlas of the brain and nervous centres. This physiologist goes to his work with the keen eagerness of an old huntsman who is beating a well-known game. He wants to solve the perplexing problems which the Sphinx typified thousands of years ago.

Dr. Brown-Sequard is the grandson of Irish emigrants to America, and the son of an American naval officer who was probably massacred by pirates and of a French creole lady. He was born in the Mauritius, where he learned to speak French as a child and English as a schoolboy. There is the warmth of the Irishman in his oratory. The scientific facts which he is always trying to master appear to feed his fancy as well as to enrich his intellect. Russians and Bonmanians are greatly drawn toward Dr. Brown-Sequard. But the Russian students need not like to think too much about the experiments. There is much torture in the Russian woman for the laboratory animals. It does not show itself in puerile sensibility, but in a kindness which makes me think that but for the severe climate of Russia Buddhism would have spread there from Asia.

OLD JEFF.

Statement of a Member of His Personal Staff.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Dec. 22.—Maj. Frank Watson, who was on Jeff. Davis' personal staff during the War, was interviewed today by a Democrat reporter. In reply to a question if he was with Davis in Georgia in 1865, he replied: "Yes, I was with him there at Washington, Ga., and if you want to say anything about Gen. Joe Johnston's statement that Jeff got away with $2,000,000, you can deny it. I know it wasn't so. Davis' body-guard was paid off at Washington. The boys got all the money he had. Between $120,000 and $140,000 in gold and silver coin was equally divided. This was in April, 1865. Jeff Davis here dismissed his body-guard, telling them to look out for themselves and he would try and take care of himself. I was then under orders of the President and the Secretary of the Navy. The latter officer, Breckinridge, had previously gone to Florida, and I was under the direct orders of the President. We were skirmishing around lively then, trying to keep out of the way of Wilson's cavalry, numbering about 900. I had charge and control of all communications between Richmond and Shreveport, and from the fact that, in January preceding, the disbandment. I received orders from the President to go down on the Mississippi and build a lot of boats. I am led to believe he first intended to escape with his body-guards through Texas into Mexico. We saw all the money and saw it divided. I do not believe the story now circulating through the papers."

A SALOON ROW.

Officers of the Law Trying to Find Out Who Killed Louis Tipke.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Dec. 23.—The trial of Hein and Henry Von Helm for the murder of Louis Tipke in a saloon row last summer has been going on at Red Wing all this week. The evidence showed that the men left the saloon together; that Von Helm threatened Tipke. The noise of a quarrel was heard outside, and Tipke was found stabbed, but no one saw the deed. The jury in the case of Hein came into court this morning at 10 o'clock, declaring that they could not agree on a verdict. As the difficulty seemed to be several questions of law, the Judge made a brief statement of such law, and the jury retired again, returned to the court-room a second time, not being able to agree upon a verdict, and were discharged by the Judge. They had been in session over two hours. It was difficult to get a jury. Two special venires of eighteen jurors each and twelve talesmen were exhausted in procuring a jury for the trial of the other co-defendant, Henry Von Helm. At a few minutes past 11 o'clock it was, however, completed, and Col. William Colville made the opening speech, closing between 4 and 5 o'clock. The defense put in no testimony. Judge McClure allowed the jury a recess till 9:30 a. m. tomorrow before charging them. Mrs. Kirn, one of the State's witnesses, has not recovered from her nervous attack on the 21st. It is feared the delirium may be permanent.

One of Boston's Car Conductors.

Boston Journal.

They were riding home from the rehearsal the other afternoon, and discussing, as the car bumped along, the various compositions which had been performed. "Which do you think was the best?" inquired one. "Well," said the other, "on the whole, that lovely nocturne of Chopin pleased me most"—the name of the composer is spelled as she pronounced it. The conductor was taking up fares at this moment, and turned pale, but recovering himself in a moment, he said, as he punched a ticket, "Shoveling, if you please," and sailed out upon the rear platform, while the amateur musical critics gazed after him in speechless wonder.

Feminine Financiers.

New York Herald.

Again an alleged financier belonging to the gentler sex has come to grief, or, properly speaking, has brought some of her customers to grief. Why women persist in trusting members of their sex, women of whom they know little or nothing, to invest money for them is a mystery that the masculine contingent cannot solve. If women were shaved and shorn, men while commanding the sympathy of women themselves would be inclined to rail against the folly of marrying the latter, or, if women are unwilling to do so, their fathers, husbands, and brothers should be compelled to see it and protect them from the sharpers who are ever lurking for their easy dollars. Men are now investing for their own dollars their hard earnings broken on the hot, fiery furnaces of speculation, and anything without. He is one of the most celebrated men of the Sorbonne. He has published more than a hundred volumes on physiology and physiology. M. Paul Bert is the Jordan of vivisection. Dr. Brown-Sequard is the Moses. SOCIAL EVENTS.

Reception to the Pupils of the Academy of Fine Arts.

The winter term of the Chicago Academy of Fine Arts ended yesterday, and the event was celebrated in a very enjoyable manner in the shape of a reception to the pupils of the academy, tendered by those true friends of art and stanch supporters of the institution, Mr. and Mrs. James H. Dole, at their elegant residence, No. 237 Dearborn avenue. To many of the pupils the reception was indeed a rare treat, as it enabled them to spend a pleasant and profitable afternoon looking at Mr. Dole's large collection of pictures, among them being many works by noted American and foreign artists. In addition to the pupils there were present a goodly number of the friends of Mr. and Mrs. Dole, and the afternoon was passed with much enjoyment by all. After some time had been spent in inspecting the numerous works of art which the Dole mansion contains, the company was treated by a short address by Mr. H. N. Hibbard, who gave the students some excellent advice as to the future, and perseverance necessary in order to achieve success, and in their behalf extended thanks to the host and hostess for the very agreeable entertainment. A choice refection was then served in the dining-room, and at about half-past 5 o'clock the company dispersed.

Included among the guests were the following: Mr. E. W. Blatchford and daughter, Miss A. Shaw, Mr. H. P. Spredl, Mr. L. C. Earle, Mr. Paul Blatchford, Mr. and Mrs. H. N. Hibbard, Mr. J. H. Arrest of Two Post-Office Employes in the South for Robbing the Mails.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

ATLANTA, Ga., Dec. 23.—Today, through the assistance of Inspectors Small and Williams, Chief-Inspector Frey, of the Atlanta division, caused the arrest of William H. Howard, register clerk of the Atlanta Post-Office, charging him with embezzlement. Evidence goes to show that on the 1st of November Howard appropriated to his own use a registered package containing $330, mailed by the Postmaster at Cartersville to the Postmaster at Atlanta, sent here for deposit. Other evidence shows that on the 7th of December Howard also embezzled forty-five registered packages containing various sums of money from a through pouch made up for New York. Howard was carried before Commissioner Buck, and, on his not being ready for trial, was allowed to give $1,000 bail. On the 21st of this month Post-Office Inspector Henry C. Booth arrested at Ducktown, Tenn., near the Georgia line, San Juan Hunsucker, late mail-carrier on the route from Murphy to Ducktown, charged with cutting a mail pouch and embezzling two registered letters, one containing $447 of postal money-order funds. Defendant was committed to jail in default of bail by Commissioner Parks at Ducktown.

A WIFE-MURDERER.

John F. Simpson, of Detroit, Found Guilty of the Murder of His Wife Last Summer.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

DETROIT, Mich., Dec. 23.—The trial of John F. Simpson for the murder of his wife, which has been in progress in the Recorder's Court for nine days, resulted today in a verdict of murder in the first degree. The circumstances of the affair, briefly stated, are as follows: Mr. and Mrs. Simpson had separated a few weeks previous to the crime, which occurred July 31 last. Mrs. Simpson had set up a boarding-house, and on the date named, while returning home at 9:30 o'clock in the evening, a man suddenly raised himself from the corner of a fence in front of her cottage and shot her. She lived about thirty-six hours, and declared during that time that it was her husband who had shot her. Corroborative evidence was introduced by the prosecution. The defense attempted to prove an alibi, and the evidence was very contradictory. The jury, however, was out only an hour and forty-five minutes, when a verdict was rendered as stated. The case was hotly contested on both sides.

HANDKERCHIEFS.

No other house in this city has such a tremendous rush for their handkerchiefs as the popular house of Morgenthau Bros. & Co., State and Monroe streets.

From morning till late at night their counters are lined with eager purchasers. The bargains offered by them in first-class goods are, to say the least, astonishing.

Silk handkerchiefs from 25 cents upwards; pure linen handkerchiefs for gentlemen at 19 cents, which cannot be duplicated elsewhere for less than 40 cents apiece.

Their assortment of fancy and holiday goods is still complete, and in celluloid toilet cases they offer a splendid bargain at $5.50 for a complete set, containing mirror, brush, and comb in elegant case. They have sold several hundred of these cases during the first five days of this week.

Yearly Showing of the Vanderbilt Roads—A Falling-Off in Earnings.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

NEW YORK, Dec. 22.—The effects of the prolonged competition in rates between the great railroad lines to the West are very distinctly shown in the reports just made of the operations for the fiscal year of the New York Central, the Lake Shore, the Michigan Central, and the Canada Southern Railroads. In the case of each of them, except the Michigan Central, there has been a decline in the percentage of earnings; and in the case of the Michigan Central there was also an actual decline in earnings per share. The losses are frankly attributed in the reports to the low rates at which freights were carried. The increased volume of business would, if last year's rates had been maintained, have increased the earnings and dividends enormously. The statement of the operators of the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad Company for the fiscal year ending Sept. 30 shows that from passengers there were received in 1880 and 1881 $6,958,022, as compared with $6,611,136.51 in 1879 and 1880. The earnings in 1880 from freights were $23,199,005.94. For miscellaneous business the earnings in 1880-'81 were $465,808.02, while in 1879-'80 they were $4,264,748.75. A falling off in total earnings is shown, the amount in 1880-'81 being $29,622,836.78, while in 1879-'80 they were $33,175,884.26. For the last fiscal year the expenses were $20,066,780.94, while for the previous year they were $17,549,984.28. The net earnings in 1880-'81 were $12,555,816.24, as compared with $15,625,899.98 in 1879-'80, and the net profits this year were $7,603,627.11, instead of $10,769,219.51 in 1879-'80. There were paid this year in dividends 4½ per cent $7,128,243.51, while in 1879-'80 the dividends at the same rate amounted to $7,141,136.25. The surplus for 1880-'81 is $734,-383.60, while in 1879-'80 it was $3,627,956.76. While in 1879-'80 the profits per share were $11.28, they were this year but $8.52; the expenses per cent being in this year and the last respectively $66.17 and $58.35.

The Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railroad company submitted to the meeting of the Board of Directors presents the operations of the road for the year, those of the current month being partly estimated. According to this statement the gross earnings in 1881 were $17,879,000, while in 1880 they were $18,746,481. In 1881 the operating expenses were $10,416,105, as compared with $11,288,093 in 1881. The percentage of earnings last year was 58.26, as compared with 60.20 this year, the net earnings in 1880 being $6,958,388, while in 1881 they were $6,464,000. After payment of interest, rentals, and dividends on guaranteed stock, the balances were $5,500,000 in 1880 and $4,000,000 in 1881, equal to $11.29 per share in 1880 and $8.22 in 1881. The dividends in each year were $4,887,000, leaving a surplus of $1,613,388 in 1880 and of $816,000 in 1881. A gain of about $600,000 is reported in passenger mail, express and miscellaneous freight-tonnage income, which represents about 5 per cent. The reduction in rates caused a falling-off of over $1,255,000 in earnings from that source. If the freight rates of last year had been obtained for a similar service this year, there would have been a gain in gross earnings of about $500,000, instead of the loss of over $750,000 now shown. The net profit would have been increased by the sum of these two amounts. Upon the same basis expenses would have been reduced about 2½ per cent of the earnings, or about 5 per cent more than last year.

The statement presented yesterday to the Board of Directors of the operations of the Michigan Central Railroad Company for the year ahead gross earnings for 1881 (December partly estimated) to be $9,938,000, as compared with $9,095,749 in 1881. Operating expenses amounted in 1880 to $5,738,751, as compared with $6,766,000 in 1881. A percentage of earnings for 1881 this year as compared with 63.16 last year. This year's net earnings are $2,184,000, while those of 1880 were $3,356,998. The balance in 1880 equals $800 per share, while in 1881 it was $580 per share. The dividends in 1880 and 1881 each amounted to $1,400,000, which in 1881 they were at 2½ per cent, amounting to but $800,000. There was a gain of about $400,000 in passenger business; but from freight, although the tonnage was 4½ per cent greater than last year, the earnings were about $550,000 less, owing to reduced rates affecting both gross earnings and net profits. In 1880 the net earnings were $1,956,000, while in 1881 they were reduced to $150,000 by the earnings of the Detroit and Bay City Line (145 miles), which the company has operated since April 1. The net earnings of that line have more than met the interest on the bonds issued for its purchase. The increase in percentage of expenses is mainly owing to the reduced rates on freight, and partly to increased cost of labor and the principal items of supplies.

The Canada Southern Railroad Company in its statement for last year, the operations of December being partly estimated, shows its gross earnings to have been $3,372,555, as compared with $3,705,979.19 in 1880, while the net earnings were $976,452.38 in 1881, as compared with $1,250,-[illegible] in 1880. The decrease in gross earnings was $333,373.87, or 4 per cent, the increase in operating expenses was $299,811.17, or 11.5 per cent, and the decrease in net earnings $273,561.44, or 24.4 per cent. The increase in operating expenses was caused by a somewhat unusual expenditure for renewals and maintenance of the road and equipment, an increase in the freight movement of 10 per cent over that of the year 1880, and a greater cost of materials and labor. The loss in revenue arises chiefly from the decrease in rates obtained on through freight business, in which the average reduction was 12 per cent. If the advance of 1880 had been obtained on the tonnage of 1881 more than $500,000 would have been added to the net revenue for the same traffic shows an increase of 5 per cent in the number of tons carried, but the low rates received from through passengers caused a falling-off of 4 per cent in the gross earnings as compared with 1880. Had the rates of that year been maintained throughout 1881 they would have added more than $100,000 to the revenue from this source. The increase in the rate of interest on bonds from 3 per cent to 5 per cent has been fully met, notwithstanding the exceptional drain on income.

The Great Steamship Lines Which Discriminate Against the Western Trunk-Lines Association Will Be Treated to a Circular Hereafter by the Western Roads.

The Western Trunk-Lines Passenger Association held a meeting yesterday at Commissioner Dixon's office, in the Rand-McNally building, for the purpose of considering ways and means to stop the discrimination lately made against the roads of the association by ocean steamships of the Eastern trunk lines. As is generally known, the roads in the Western association compelled the Eastern trunk lines to pay them twenty per cent of the net business from the East carried over their roads. Some of the Eastern trunk lines, fearful of gracefully submitting to the inevitable, have lately tried to get even with the roads of the Western association, by another all the damage they could over that made against the association, and in the manner in which the association, in which the association's members of the most prominent will you be paid for that interest. The money paid into the State Treasury in June had the full amount of the State loan for which these bonds were issued, and the State received the interest on the bonds at the Bank of Commerce last July, and will continue to pay it, or dishonor its obligations. The company has plenty of money to pay these coupons, but it has paid its money to pay those coupons, but it has paid its debts in full, and does not intend to continue paying interest on a debt that is paid. The company intends to pay its own obligations promptly, and its regular February dividend, and has money in hand for that purpose."

What Is Making Boom in Nebraska.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

LINCOLN, Neb., Dec. 23.—Well-informed railroad men in this State declare that for every mile of railroad built in Nebraska during the present year three miles will be built in 1882. The Union Pacific is expected to do considerable of this railroad building, and its plans are being laid accordingly. The engineer corps of that road have just completed a survey of three different routes from this city to Beatrice, and grading will be commenced at once on the one possessing the most advantages as a railroad route.

A Lake Erie & Western Bridge Washed Out.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

LAFAYETTE, Ind., Dec. 23.—A temporary bridge over the north fork of Wild-Cat Creek, on the line of the Lake Erie & Western Road, was swept out by the flood early this morning. It cannot be replaced before Saturday or Sunday. All Lake Erie & Western passenger-trains are forced to run from this city to Colfax on the Big Horn Road, and from there to Frankfort, where the main line is reached. There is also a washout on the Lake Erie & Western Road near Ambia.

The Louisville & Nashville to Swallow the Chesapeake & Ohio.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

NEW YORK, Dec. 23.—Negotiations are pending between the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company and the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company by which it is proposed to have the latter road pass under the control of the former. The lease has been drawn, and it was stated today that only matters of detail stand in the way of its immediate execution. The terms of the contract are withheld; but it is understood that the Chesapeake & Ohio's interests are fully cared for.

Florida Central.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Dec. 23.—The Lengle interest in the Florida Central Railway was today sold to Sir Edward J. Reed, the English capitalist. The transfer gives Reed a controlling interest in the Florida Central, of which he was today elected President.

Miscellaneous Items.

Mr. D. W. Caldwell, General Manager of the Pennsylvania Company, the Pittsburg, Cincinnati & St. Louis, and the Vandalia Line, gives notice that the annual passes for 1881, and the time and complimentary trip-passes expiring with this year, will be good until Jan. 15, 1882.

A detachment of United States troops arrived here yesterday, in charge of Mr. Richard Cheney, Southeastern Passenger Agent of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company, from Columbus Barracks, and left for Salt Lake City, via the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy and Union Pacific Railroads.

Mr. J. R. Marmaduke has been appointed General Agent of the Memphis & Charleston Railroad at Chicago, the appointment to take effect Jan. 1. His territory will extend west from the Mississippi River, north to Canada, south to Cincinnati and the Ohio River, and east to Indianapolis and Detroit.

The contract has just been let for the construction of a new truss bridge on the Wabash Road to span Horse Creek, near the Town of Essex. Heretofore the creek has been spanned by a pile bridge, and during the severe floods last fall considerable of the road thereabouts was washed out. The new bridge will prevent a repetition of these calamities. The bridge will be 122 feet in length, and will cost about $4,000. Wells, French & Co., have the job, and will begin the work of building at once. It is expected that the bridge will be finished in three or four weeks.

Mr. James R. Wood, General Passenger Agent of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, has just issued the following important notice to conductors: "The alteration, by scalpers and others in active correspondence with New York, of Hayes and other forms of tickets sold at reduced rates, is becoming so frequent that further protective measures are necessary, both for the traveling public and these companies. You are therefore instructed to examine carefully all coupon and excursion tickets presented for passage, to see that dates and limits have not been changed; and, where any alteration has been made, either by erasure or cutting out parts of contracts and substituting new dates and coupons marked therefrom, you will refuse lift such tickets and collect the fare, securing from holders their addresses and such information as to how the tickets came into their possession, reporting all the facts in connection therewith to this office by letter."

The Illinois Central Railroad evidently intends to take good care of what riparian rights it may have on the lake front. Under cover of darkness last night last the employes of the road built a stout, solid-built crib in the lake at a point about twenty feet south of where the Twelfth street sewer empties into the lake, and a little more than 300 feet from the shore. On top of this they placed a small red switch-house, in which a man has been located night and day ever since. Owners of bath-houses in the vicinity were surprised to find the new acquisition to their neighborhood when they came down for the business in the morning. It was mentioned in Sunday's TRIBUNE that J. J. Lenmann, of the "Fair," had purchased the eastern one of the row of houses on Park row, and that he intended to build a pavilion on the beach nearly opposite his house, on the riparian right of the property. The railroad people have forestalled him somewhat by taking possession, but, as he owns only from Park row to the Twelfth street sewer, and as the switch-house is about 300 feet south of the property recently purchased by the railroad, he can have no complaint to offer. The Illinois Central is no doubt anxious enough to retain possession of the bank, and particularly of that portion south of Twelfth street, as it is just the slackest spot in the bend which occurs between there and sixteenth street. It is said that the company is willing to purchase, at a reasonable price, all the land fronting its tracks on the west from Twelfth street south to Sixteenth, in order to obtain possession.

OBITUARY.

Levi Bishop, One of Detroit's Oldest and Best-Known Citizens.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

DETROIT, Mich., Dec. 23.—Levi Bishop, one of Detroit's best known and highly-respected citizens, died this morning of jaundice, after but a week's confinement. Mr. Bishop was a man of remarkably robust constitution, and usually enjoyed excellent health, but about six months ago an affection of the liver, attributed to his sedentary habits, made its appearance, and gradually developed despite the best medical treatment. He appeared on the streets daily, however, and attended to his business as usual until Dec. 13, when he made his last visit to his office. He was born in the Town of Russell, Hampden County, Mass., Oct. 15, 1815, his ancestors being of English stock and among the earliest settlers of New Haven, Conn. He spent his boyhood on his father's farm, receiving such education as the district schools afforded, and reading all the books within his reach. At 15 he was apprenticed to his uncle, Caleb Humeston, and learned the trades of a tanner and shoemaker. Coming to Detroit in 1837 he found the shoemakers on a strike. He succeeded in organizing them and establishing a cooperative manufactory and store, which proved quite successful. In the "Patriot war" of 1838-'39 he enrolled among the volunteers, and joined an artillery company. While this company was firing a salute on the Campus Martius, July 4, 1839, a premature discharge carried away Mr. Bishop's right hand and part of his forearm—an accident which changed the whole current of his after life. He therefore decided for further work at his trade, he began the study of law in the office of the Hon. A. S. Porter, afterward United States Senator from Michigan. His great energy, tireless industry, and natural aptitudes soon won for him an extensive legal practice, which he retained up to his retirement in 1879, when he held a place in the front rank of the bar of Michigan. Politically Mr. Bishop was an active and fierce Democrat, and was intrusted with several local and other offices by that party. In 1859 he was elected a member of the Board of Regents of the University, and during the six years of his office he made his influence felt unmistakably both in the board and institution. Whether justly or not, he was recognized as the leader of the opposition in the memorable "Tappan war," which resulted in the retirement of Dr. Tappan and the election of Dr. Haven as President of the university. It is worthy of note that the death of these three men have followed each other at an interval of but a few weeks. He was an admirer of poetry, and made some ventures in that field himself, the longest and best known of his poems being "Pontiac and Grondie," a versified Indian legend of over 10,000 lines. As an antiquarian and a student of the early history of Detroit he had no equal in the State.

Dr. Stephens Cutter, at Coldwater, Mich.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

COLDWATER, Mich., Dec. 23.—Dr. Stephens Cutter died at his residence in this city at 7 o'clock this evening of apoplexy. He had practiced medicine in this place since 1845, having graduated at the Geneva, N. Y., Medical College, and has ever since sustained a very big professional reputation. He has been Mayor of the city, and was a member of the Board of Education when Central Building was erected, devoting much of his time to the work of superintendent of the building, and had in making the structure a thorough and efficient. In 1862 he was appointed United States Examining Surgeon of Pensions, which office he held at the time of his death. He was for years a member of the Board of Control of the State Public Schools located here, and to his indefatigable labors and undying zeal in behalf of the dependent children of the State is the success of the institution largely indebted. His family was absent from his house when he expired, but they intends to pay its own obligations promptly, and its regular February dividend, and has money in hand for that purpose."

AMUSEMENTS.

CENTRAL MUSIC-HALL.

Hector Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust" was performed for the first time in this country Feb. 12, 1880, by the New York Symphony Society, assisted by the Oratorio and Arion Societies. It was given for the first time in Chicago last February, on the evenings of the 23d and 24th, and portions of it were repeated at a matinée the Wednesday following. The orchestra and chorus then were under the direction of Theodore Thomas, the chorus being furnished by the Apollo Club, and the soloists being Miss Fanny Kellogg as Marguerite, Mr. W. C. Tower as Faust, and Mr. Franz Remmertz as Mephistopheles. The "Damnation of Faust" is called by its composer a "dramatic legend." The score is divided into four parts, containing nineteen scenes and an epilog. The scenes are detached without much continuity, and in some instances departing entirely from the spirit as well as the situations of the original. The work was so elaborately described in these columns at the time of its first production three years last year that a mere outline of the composer's idea will be all that is necessary now.

There is no overture to the legend. After a few bars of instrumentation Faust has a solo in which he greets the return of spring, accompanied by strings and reeds, and leading to a merry dance movement for chorus. The Hungarian national hymn is introduced as the "Rakoczy March"; the advance of an army visible to Faust is sounded, and with this ringing brilliant orchestral work the first part ends. The second part is the first scene in the opera of Gounod, introducing us to Faust in his study. He has a short solo interrupted by a distantly-heard Easter chorus [illegible] the cup to his lips, and as the massive harmonies of the chorus die away Mephistopheles appears. There is a duet; the two disappear, and are again seen in Auerbach's cellar among the students, where Brander sings the "Song of the Flea." Again disappearing, Faust and Mephisto reappear on the banks of the Elbe, where, after a lovely prelude, Mephisto sings "In this fair bower," and is followed by a "Chorus of Gnomes and Sylphs," called in the scene "Faust's Vision." This is one of the loveliest gems in this grand work, culminating in beauty as Faust, seeing the vision of Marguerite, joins in the chorus. Then comes a "Ballet of Sylphs" and a Latin chorus for soldiers closing the second part. The third part opens with drums and trumpets sounding the taltoo preluding an aria by Faust in Marguerite's chamber, which leads to the entrance of Marguerite, who sings the ballad of "The King of Thule." Then follows an interpolation by Mephistopheles, the "Will o' the Wisp" minuet, and Mephisto's "Serenade." The part closes with a trio and chorus. In the fourth part Marguerite has a soft and expressive romanza in which she deplores the past; Faust recounts the forlorn state of Marguerite to Faust, and prevails upon him to sign the compact. Then they mount their black steeds, and the "ride to Hell" begins. With marvelous skill the master details the terrible journey, closing with the chorus of the spirits in Pandemonium welcoming Faust, and the chorus of angels receiving Marguerite.

The first concert of the tenth season of the Apollo Club was given last night at Central Music-Hall in the presence of a large and appreciative audience, when the "Damnation of Faust" was again presented, under the leadership of Mr. Thomas, with the instrumental part interpreted by his orchestra, and the vocal score rendered by the Apollo Club with, subsequently, the same personnel as a year ago. It is needless to refer at length to the broad effects and startling contrasts as well as to the delicate shading of this massive work of the now popular composer. Its proper interpretation is a severe test upon all taking part. From the soloists it requires great grace of voice, strong dramatic power, and much passionate feeling; of the chorus, skilled voices and large numbers of them, with the utmost precision in attack and the thorough command of the music; of the orchestra that its members shall be musicians and not mere players. Of the choral and orchestral work we may say that it was admirably done—almost perfectly. At times the male chorus fell behind in the time and the first part of the epilog, the chorus "Then all in hell was hushed," was spoiled by the bad work of the basses. So the students' song, "Who Knows a lively song, etc.," was not taken promptly enough, and the choral work was thoroughly good and fully equal, if not superior, to the performances of last year. The orcuestra was under good control and carefully watched by its indefatigable leader. Only in the trio at the close of the third part did it drag and require spurring to keep it at its work. Praise is, however, justly due to these two most important elements in the production of this "dramatic legend," and deserved applause was given to the "Hungarian March," and to the delicate and fine work in the "Dance of the Sylphs," and the "Will-o'-the-Wisps" minuet.

The soloists last night were, Miss Emma Heckle, as Marguerite; Mr. Charles A. Knorr, as Faust; Mr. W. H. Clark, as Mephistopheles, and Mr. J. E. McWade, as Brander. It was a difficult task to sing with such surroundings, and to interpret so trying a score. That the solo work was creditably done, is a fact of which those taking part have cause for self-congratulation. That it was satisfactorily done, from the standpoint of such an interpretation as the composer designed, was hardly expected. Miss Heckle had the least to do, but was so nervous, or it is a case that she failed entirely to give effect to that music in that charming ballad at the opening of the derivative scene. There was a King in Thule. Although gifted with a powerful and well-rounded voice, its upper notes lose the sweetness characteristic of the lower tones, nor is it always perfectly true in fortissimo effects. This was noticeable in the trio at the close of the fourteenth scene, which, beautiful as it is, was but indifferently rendered. Mr. Clark has a fine bass voice, resonant and clear, but destitute of expression and skill in the delivery of lyric work. The first part ends, however, and difficult part, requiring great dramatic power, which he failed to give, and therefore omitted what the "Damnation" especially demands. None of the soloists, however, evinced any strength of dramatic coloring. Mr. Knorr is a tenor leggiero, where a tenor robusto would seem to be required by the exigencies of the music. He is a very accurate and conscientious singer, and used his voice with good taste and feeling. Mr. McWade had but one solo of importance, which went smoothly with the exception of the last two lines. Mr. Eddy presided at the organ. Tonight the "Messiah" will be given by the same club.

PATTI'S CONCERTS.

Mr. Fryer, who is Mr. Abbey's advance agent, is in the city, and announces three concerts by Mme. Patti at Haverly's Theatre, Jan. 3, 5, and 7, the latter being a matinée. On Tuesday night an act from "Aida" will be given; on Thursday an act from "Faust," and at the matinée an act from "Trovatore."

DRAMATIC NOTES.

Fred Julian left yesterday for New Orleans to join the Fay-Templeton company.

Harry Jamieson has become a member of the Ada Gray troupe. He joined them at Joliet.

Rochelle, the young tragedienne, left yesterday for St. Joseph, Mo., to make preparations for her contemplated trip to Australia.

The Adelaide Elliott company disbanded Wednesday at Mason City, and the remnants arrived in town yesterday. Bad business is the cause assigned.

Manager Z. W. Sprague, of the Olympic, will commence the new year with a number of improvements in his theatre, which will command the attention of the public and form a good example for the other city managers to follow. He has organized his stage-hands into a complete fire department, which is under the command of Mr. Thomas Tipping. A hose 150 feet in length surrounds the stage and another the auditorium, and in addition a number of extinguishers have been put in the theatre, and each employé properly drilled and instructed as to the use of each of the apparatuses. A direct wire was yesterday placed connecting the theatre with Engine No. 13, located behind the house on Dearborn street, from where an alarm can be responded to within forty seconds. The fire corps of the house are fully equipped with the necessary complement of axes, etc. In conversation with a reporter, Mr. Sprague demonstrated the results of the discipline exercised among the hands, and the time made by them in responding to an alarm. The employés were at the time scattered in various portions of the house and not expecting a call. Nevertheless four were on the stage with extinguishers and two with hose with the hydrant already turned on in two minutes and fifteen seconds, which is certainly remarkable time for an amateur company

SCATTERING THE SCOURGE.

Such Would Seem to Be New York's Way of Stamping It Out.

Rumored Intention to Import Fourteen Hundred Small-Pox Victims to Chicago.

Dr. De Wolf Puts a Veto on the Program, and Threatens a Siege of Quarantine.

Yesterday's Deaths and New Cases—Ripe Correspondence Fruitful in Suggestions of All Sorts.

Dr. De Wolf, the Commissioner of Health, stated yesterday to a TRIBUNE reporter that the outside press was not treating Chicago fairly in regard to the prevalence of small-pox. The number of from ten to fourteen cases a day would count as nothing, but the actual average was less than eight a day. The fact was that some outside sheets were trying to injure trade. Dr. De Wolf himself, while he is sometimes a little irritable, is at the same time a most painstaking and indomitable worker. His fitness as Health Commissioner is acknowledged, and he should receive the support of the Council in his efforts to suppress the disease. There is, as a fact, no epidemic in Chicago. Pittsburg and Allegheny are far worse off than this city, and there is not a town in Minnesota but has more cases and deaths in proportion to its population than Chicago. The trouble here lies in the refusal, not to say heartlessness, of Eastern sanitary officials, who have unloaded upon the Northwest thousands of small-pox-infected emigrants, who have spread the disease. Carelessness or stupidity has transported the disease to Chicago, but the percentage of deaths to native population has been less than one-fifth of 1 per cent to the population, which shows the effect of intelligence and vaccination.

There are now employed by the Health Department fourteen physicians, who have control of the matter of vaccination. They report daily at the office at 9 o'clock in the morning, at noon, and at 3 and 7 o'clock in the afternoon. A portion of the regular force is at work caring for the sick and looking to the proper burial of the dead. The entire city is divided into districts, from 1,000 to 1,200 points are used up daily in the process of house-to-house visitation and vaccination. Over 1,500 feet of all sewers have been inspected by the Health Department, unofficially, is and were it not for the foreign influx, there would be no trouble in wiping it out in a short time. But the disease prevails all over the land. It is far worse in Philadelphia, Boston, New York, and St. Louis than it is in Chicago. For instance: The steamer Westphalia arrived at New York from Germany Thursday evening. She was out at sea some fifteen days. Two days after leaving port, small-pox broke out among the 1,400 emigrants who were huddled in the steerage. In such a place there could be no system of isolation, and every one became infected. But few of these people were vaccinated, and yesterday afternoon Dr. De Wolf received a telegram from New York informing him that it was the intention to send these people directly to the West, which would compel their entrance to this city, without quarantining or vaccination. Such an act would be directed against this people. Dr. De Wolf will resist such a proceeding, and fortunately he has ample power in the premises. On receipt of the above advice he sent the following telegram to New York:

"Dr. Smith, Medical Officer in Charge of Quarantine, New York City: Do you intend to detain in quarantine for fourteen days the steerage passengers from the steamship Westphalia, just arrived at your port? I protest against the scattering of these small-pox-infected emigrants throughout the Northwest. Answer.

"OSCAR C. DE WOLF,
"Commissioner of Health."

Dr. De Wolf also sent the following dispatch to Dr. Rauch, the Secretary of the State Board of Health, at Springfield:

"The steamship Westphalia has just arrived at New York with 1,400 emigrants infected with small-pox. I have requested the medical officer in charge of quarantine to detain the whole load for fourteen days and protested against their immediate passage to the Northwest. If they are forwarded, notwithstanding my protest, will the State Board of Health act? If not, I shall immediately take measures to protect Chicago.

"OSCAR C. DE WOLF,
"Commissioner of Health."

Dr. De Wolf last evening received the following telegram from Dr. Rauch in reply to the above dispatch during the afternoon, which assures the cooperation of the City Health Department and the State Board of Health:

"SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Dec. 23.—Dr. Oscar De Wolf, Commissioner of Health, Chicago: I have telegraphed to the Quarantine Officer at the Port of New York, stating your protest and demand. We will cooperate with you to the fullest extent. Dr. Reilly will call at your office early tomorrow morning. JOHN H. RAUCH."

The joint action of the State Board and the Commissioner of Health will prevent the importation of the Westphalia's infected passengers within the borders of the State.

The State Board of Health has the power to keep these emigrants out of the State, and in case they do not Dr. De Wolf's jurisdiction extends to one mile outside of the city limits, and he proposes to quarantine them outside the city under the following section of the health ordinances of the city:

"Said Commissioner whenever and at such times as by him it shall be deemed necessary may, by proclamation (the approval of the City Council being first had and obtained), require all boats, vessels, railroad cars, or other public conveyances bound for this city, before they shall arrive within or at any wharf, depot, or landing, or stopping place thereto, to touch or stop at any or either of the sites, places, or boundaries so selected and established for quarantine purposes, and keep all such emigrants, travelers, or persons, and all such sick, diseased, or unclean persons, with their stores and baggage, as in the opinion of the officers stationed at such quarantine sites, places, or boundaries shall be deemed proper on account of the existence or general report of cholera, ship-fever, or any contagious disease, or disease apprehended to endanger the health of the city."

If railroad companies would exercise a little discretion in the premises, there would be no necessity for bringing contagious diseases into this city, or spreading them throughout the Northwest. It is certain that the passengers of the Westphalia will until such time has elapsed that there can be no danger from infection. Dr. De Wolf says it may be further necessary, however, to station a health officer at New York to prevent the importation of small-pox into Chicago.

There were two unfortunates suffering from small-pox who walked into the Health Office yesterday. One of these came from the Clark-Street Mission, and the other from No. 243 West Fifteenth street. Vaccination was performed at No. 1177 West Madison, No. 1 Front, No. 252 West Fifteenth, No. 90 Cleaver, No. 816 Noble, No. 217 West Erie, and No. 714 Larrabee streets. Deaths were reported from No. 61 Mohawk, No. 89 Clark, and No. 15 Block streets, and No. 180 Antiage avenue.

The following police-stations were visited by Health Officers last evening for the purpose of vaccinating policemen: Cottage Grove avenue, Twenty-second and Thirty-fifth street stations.

MORNING MAIL.

To the Editor of The Chicago Tribune.

CHICAGO, Dec. 22.—People who attend the early morning mass in the various Catholic churches should look well to their neighbors to see if there is not danger of being infected with the prevalent disease. SMALL-POX.

PRECAUTIONS.

To the Editor of The Chicago Tribune.

CHICAGO, Dec. 23.—In view of the prevalence of small-pox and the fact that Sunday will also be Christmas-Day, it occurs to me that the people, especially persons who have not been recently vaccinated, should be cautioned to avoid all promiscuous assemblies, notably churches and concert-halls, ordinarily frequented by persons from infected districts. Q.

THE STREET-CARS.

To the Editor of The Chicago Tribune.

CHICAGO, Dec. 23.—Please direct the attention of the authorities of the Health Department to the condition of the street-cars. As persons who have the germs of small-pox on them are constantly riding in the cars, the cars should be kept scrupulously clean. No hay or straw should be on the floors, and all movable hangings should be removed. HEALTH.

CLEAN UP.

To the Editor of The Chicago Tribune.

CHICAGO, Dec. 22.—It is well known that the dread disease, small-pox, feeds upon filth. Hence it is of importance that everybody should keep clean. Some people don's know what cleanliness is. They should be instructed. "Wash and be clean" is the Scripture recipe. The huts along the lines of all the railroads leading into the city abound in filth, as may be readily seen by those who care to look into the backyards from the car windows. These huts are the samples of the filth that abounds in all byways and alleys, especially in the Milwaukee and Chicago districts. These people should be compelled to clean up their premises, and, where necessary, to make liberal use of whitewash. Lime is a great and cheap protection against contagious disease. STATE STREET.

DISINFECT AND VENTILATE.

To the Editor of The Chicago Tribune.

CHICAGO, Dec. 22.—I desire to call the attention of the public, through your valuable paper, to the great dangers of contagious diseases which to an alarming extent now prevail in our city, and to say that every good citizen should use the utmost care, by a sanitary visit of his own premises, and notify the Health Department as to his neighbors, unless they keep their premises in a clean and healthy condition. Every person should keep a lookout, and any person having or knowing any remedy by which contagious diseases can be prevented from spreading should give it to the public through the press.

I notice that all our hotels, theatres, and retail establishments in all lines of goods are crowded with men, women, and children, and, consequently, these hotel proprietors, theatre managers, and merchants should use the utmost caution in their toilet-rooms for ladies and in their water-closets, for the reason that so many different persons use them and there is the greatest danger of contagion. Every proprietor and manager of an establishment of this kind should see to it that these places should be vaporized by some disinfectant. And I would suggest a thymol, which would destroy all danger from the atmosphere in an hour. It is a simple and well-known remedy—the best known to science—and is used in all our hospitals successfully. I am confident that this contagion can be stopped to a large extent if citizens will do their duty. Our Health Department is overburdened with work, and doing all it can, and if our people who have houses, stores, and offices would see to it that their sewers, bath-rooms, and water-closets are kept disinfected and clean, this great danger can be limited; and, unless this is done, we are on the eve of a great epidemic. I would suggest that our physicians and scientists give the public suggestions, through the press, of remedies which could be used. Sewer-gas seems to be one of the motive powers which carries disease into our houses. Cannot some one give us a remedy to prevent it, as it is a well-known fact that our sewers are infected with small-pox and all contagious diseases? CITIZEN.

GOT THE DROP ON HIM.

An Episode in a Sleeping Car on the Albany & Susquehanna Railroad.

Buffalo Express.

The express train that leaves Albany at 10 o'clock in the evening on the Albany & Susquehanna connects at Binghamton with express No. 3 on the Erie. Through coaches are run over this route from Boston, arriving in Buffalo at 11:40 the following morning. Among the passengers in one of the Pullman cars attached to this train last Saturday evening was Mr. L. H. Holbrook, of Buffalo. Mr. Holbrook had had a hard day's traveling, and as soon as the train began to climb about among the hills he climbed into his berth and went to sleep, first having partially undressed and placed his watch and a loaded Smith & Wesson under his pillow. The car was quite well filled, among the passengers being a commercial traveler bound for Hornellsville, a lady for Buffalo, and another lady for Cincinnati. Along in the little hours of the night there came a thump, and a bump, and a general shake-up, and then the car came to a stand-still. Everybody, except, possibly, the lady for Buffalo and the lady for Cincinnati—thrust his head through the curtains and and asked, "What's up?" Nothing was up, except sleepy people, but a string of freight-cars had come down a grade and made a wreck, and the express had tried to climb over it. They must lie there until things were cleared, or walk. So the man who swears said, "blank the luck," and the lady for somewhere or other said, "O dear," and I went to sleep again. Just as Mr. Holbrook was forgetting that Buffalo was several hours farther off than it should be, he felt, or saw, or dreamed he felt or saw, a hand lightly brush his face, and then slip under his pillow. Mr. Holbrook is a brave man who can do the right thing in an emergency. He didn't stop to put on his—hat, or to button his—shoes. He simply made a grab for his revolver, and bounced into the aisle in an instant. His berth was near the middle of the car, and as he landed on his feet he saw a man turning towards the side passage leading around the ladies' toilet-room towards the end of the car. In an instant Holbrook had the drop on him. As the fellow turned he faced the little Smith & Wesson, and as it was within six inches of his nose, he didn't help being that it was cocked, and the finger that touched the trigger was ready for duty.

"I'll trouble you for my watch," said Holbrook.

The fellow looked Mr. Holbrook in the eye, and then looked the revolver in the same place. Neither Holbrook nor weapon looked friendly. He wilted into a seat, and handed over the watch. "Take away that thing!" he begged, as the revolver continued to cover him. "Take it off, I tell you, and let me go! I don't want your watch!"

By this time the car was awake. "Hold on there," sang out the commercial traveler going to Hornellsville; "my watch is gone, too!"

"Oh, oh," squealed the lady going to Cincinnati, "my watch is gone, too!"

Really, this was interesting. The fellow begged and protested. He hadn't touched their watches, and didn't want to disturb them. His regard for their rest was not appreciated. The conductor appeared upon the scene but did not interfere. Some of the passengers crowded about Mr. Holbrook in social him.

"Wait, gentlemen," says Mr. Holbrook, "this is my game. If you please, I'—turning to the thief—"I want you to give up the [illegible]."

"I tell you I haven't got any on me. You wouldn't shoot me for calling off that weapon."

The finger on the weapon was getting very determined. "Throw up your hands!" shouted Holbrook, putting the iron where even a nearsighted nose couldn't help smelling it.

The man's arms went up at the word. He grew pale, and the perspiration began to drop from his face.

"Now, boys, go through him," said Holbrook. The pockets were examined, and, sure enough, there was the little gold watch. The lady from Cincinnati was excited. The other one didn't appear.

"Pull off his boots," said our hero.

"Better tuck in your shirt," said the robber to Holbrook, as the latter brought the revolver nearer than ever. The remark was evidently an artist, and the sight of half a dozen men in shirts and drawers daboing about him may have looked funny. But that revolver didn't, and his bluff and protest were of no avail. The other watch was found in a bow-log. About $80 in money was discovered upon him, but, as no one in the car could find out that he had lost any, it was not disturbed.

When Holbrook took off the revolver, the fellow gathered strength enough to ejaculate "Blank, and was seen no more. And they let him go.

And then Holbrook, nervy fellow that he is, began to shake. He was the hero of the scene, and in spite of the undress uniform of all parties was congratulated and shaken by the hand several to be. "But when it was all over," says Mr. Holbrook, and I got back into my berth, I perspired and trembled as badly as the thief had done."

The accident delayed the train so that Mr. Holbrook did not reach Buffalo until Sunday evening. For the rest of the trip he was a hero. The lady going to Cincinnati insisted on paying a generous bill into his hand, and the commercial traveler overwhelmed him with favors. Will he might; his watch and chain were worth $80.

Mr. Holbrook describes the thief as a sick-looking man, of 27 or 28 years, with dark complexion, black mustache, and one eye a little closed. He was evidently drunk, and was thrown off the train when it was stopped by the accident.

THE FRANKLIN SPECTACLE.

Some Facts from Home Concerning the Alleged Remarkable Noise—Both [illegible] the Mother Forth—[illegible] Husband Cured [illegible]

The interest which [illegible] created in a [illegible] circle [illegible] Franklin [illegible] and in question [illegible] the reason of a [illegible] direct Divine [illegible] prayer, [illegible] ed. Among those to [illegible] was the Franklin (Pa.) Postmaster, who demarked the facts in the case in the following letter:

POST-OFFICE, FRANKLIN, Pa., Dec. 18, 1881.—Mr. —, St. Louis—DEAR SIR: In answer to your inquiry, I can say that I have the opinion of the physicians that attended Mrs. Boyd that she had a very serious female trouble, and strong indications of their being cancer, which some of the doctors examining thought to be the case. He says the account of the girl's weakness is, however, much exaggerated; that she could get in and out of bed, etc.; that the weakness was partly the effect of the mind, and that the apparent cure is from the same cause, but if a cancer or organic disease of the kind existed it had not been removed. The case is exciting considerable attention, many believing it a miracle. The lady is no doubt better, because she thinks it is. I send a Franklin paper. Yours,

D. D. GRAFF, Postmaster.

The paper alluded to was the Franklin Spectator, and its account of the occurrence was as follows:

Considerable excitement has been caused in this vicinity over a case of prayer cure which occurred in the Third Ward, this city, last Tuesday, the 6th inst. Mrs. Lloyd, wife of Rev. Geo. J. W. Lloyd, pastor of the Church of God, has for six months gone, while living at Lower Newton, Westmoreland County, contracting a severe cold and on the 20th of October last was taken sick after moving to Franklin, she was compelled to keep her bed. A physician was called in, who gave her for her cough, stating as his opinion that she had, in coughing, strained herself, accounting in that way for the shocking pains the lady felt in the lower part of the body. After a couple of weeks, not being relieved by the treatment of Doctor No. 1, at the advice of friends, a change was made in physicians. Doctor No. 2, as the first call, would express an opinion, but at a subsequent visit, and after a careful examination of the patient, informed her husband that the cause of her sickness was a cancer, pronouncing her incurable, and hoping only to ease the sufferer during the few remaining months of her life by making an opium-eater of her.

Mrs. Lloyd, who firmly believed that her time to die had not yet come, desired the attendance of Doctor No. 1, who, with two other M. D.'s, made an examination, two of them satisfying with Doctor No. 2 that the disease was cancer and incurable. The other physician said that, although it might be a cancer, he had seen similar cases which proved to be simply nervous. He proposed for the patient, but no improvement being noticeable she ceased to take his prescriptions, and had not taken medicine of any kind for ten days prior to Thursday, the 8th inst.

On the evening of the last-named day, at the request of Mr. Lloyd, the particular friends of his wife met in the church for the purpose of praying for her recovery. During the time that the praying was going on in the church Mrs. Lloyd arose from her bed, and her attendant, thinking her delirious, tried to step her, but was assured by the now recovered woman that she was in her right mind. Mrs. Lloyd, without assistance, dressed herself and walked to the church, and astonished the congregation by leading its prayer and delivering an exhortation without the least apparent fatigue. She has since been up and about the house every day, superintending her domestic affairs.

Mrs. Lloyd states that she had implicit faith that she would be cured by prayer, and she thinks that a cure would have been accomplished some ten days before, had she had faith, when she was anointed according to the rites of her religion, and in accordance with the fifth chapter of St. James, beginning at the thirteenth verse.

Many of the reports published by the newspapers are erroneous, and the lady has been quoted as having said many things which she emphatically denies, telling a representative of the Spectator that she had been interviewed by no reporters up to the time of his coming—Monday evening.

The above account is simply the facts of the case without exaggeration or embellishment. From these facts the reader will draw his own conclusions.

The Spectator set forth the non-believing side of the case by quoting an interview with Dr. E. G. Snowden, one of the physicians who attended the sick lady, as follows:

"Well, Doctor, what do you think of the Third Ward miracle?"

"I think it is all bosh. Who started such an absurd story? It must have been some of you reporters."

His first statement exactly met our idea of the case, but the story was certainly started by the members of the church.

The Doctor then gave us his knowledge of the case, substantially as follows:

He was called to see Mrs. Boyd some time ago, and after a thorough examination of her ailments said that she could not be cured, that she was afflicted with one of those peculiarly distressing cancers that are incurable, and that patients suffering from one of these cancers usually live from eighteen months to two years, and that during this time they will have long weak spells, but at the end of health they will revive till they appear in almost their usual health. Mrs. Boyd is a woman of peculiar nervous and hysterical disposition, and there was nothing in her case that would prevent her being under some extraordinary excitement, be it religious or any other kind, from getting up out of bed, dressing herself, and walking a mile or so. There is nothing surprising or supernatural to me about it, for it is the natural course of the disease. At times the patient will very low, and at times they will rapidly recover to apparent health and strength, but, as a matter of course, such recoveries are only temporary, lasting for a greater or less period of time, owing to the condition of the patient.

"Then, you think there is no reason why in the next eighteen or twenty months there could not be a score of just such 'miracles' worked on the subject?"

"There will be, very likely, a number of just such recoveries, and people will claim accomplishes its final work," said the Doctor.

The following letter, which is produced without any attempt at improving upon the literary style or orthographic accomplishments of the reverend writer, will show that the husband of the lady is a believer in the miraculous interposition theory:

FRANKLIN, Pa., Dec. 1, 1881.—Mr. —, St. Louis—DEAR SIR: Your letter at hand, and in reply will say my wife was given up to die by three of the best physicians this city, and they gave her case into the hands of God; asked some friends to pray with us for her to be healed. Found, while we were in the church praying, she got up, dressed herself, and walking to the church-house; thirty hours before I did not help seeing that it was cooked, and the finger that touched the trigger was ready for duty.

"I'll trouble you for my watch," said Holbrook.

The fellow looked Mr. Holbrook in the eye, and then looked the revolver in the same place. Neither Holbrook nor weapon looked friendly. He wilted into a seat, and handed over the watch. EELS A LA TOKIO.

How the Fish-Serpent Becomes a Noted Japanese Delicacy—A Broiling Process Which Converts Wriggling Monsters into Rare Diet.

San Francisco Examiner.

On the street called Okiyo-koge (High Resting-Place of the Mikado), in Tokio, is a restaurant "where persons can enjoy the supreme delight of broiled eels." This establishment is kept by a man named Maroki, and is well worth a visit.

Most foreigners profess to dislike native food, and never attempt to overcome their repugnance, while others boldly taste everything offered them, and soon learn to appreciate the perfect cookery and dainty service of the Japanese, and prefer their dishes to the eternal sameness of our own.

One afternoon in April I was strolling about the streets, engaged in watching the interesting occupations of the people, when I met a young Japanese who had been educated at Harvard, and who appreciated a "slice off the breast of a canvas-back duck and a tenderloin steak as perfectly as "one to the manner born." Having politely saluted me, he remarked:

"I am on my way to Maroki's. Would you like to join me in a feast of broiled eels? It is said that this month the unagi is a fit morsel for the gods."

"Unagi?" I replied, with a somewhat dubious shake of the head; "I never was very fond of the sea serpent."

"Probably you have never tasted them prepared by my countrymen," he slyly returned. "I remember once eating some at Demonico's. [shuddering.] They were soft, flavorless morsels, inclosed in a quivering jelly. Come along with me and partake of a dish, the taste of which will be pleasantly remembered long after you return to America. You, who are half a Japanese, ought not any longer to remain ignorant of one of our chief delicacies."

Succumbing a fin-riki-sha, we squeezed into it the economical native fashion, and after a brief ride turned into the Okiyo-koge market and alighted at the entrance to Maroki's establishment—a two-storied building, the lower apartment of which was furnished with grated, prison-like windows. At the entrance were the proprietor and his wife, who, as we paid our fin-riki-sha man, prostrated themselves, bowed to the earth, and murmured: "Honorable Thousand welcomes to our humble place." Rising, awaited our pleasure.

"Have the eels good today?" patronizingly inquired my friend; "I have heard that their market is not quite up to par." "Do you procure them from the city canals, or are they from the Sumida River?"

The proprietor again bowed, then twitched the left corner of his mouth, after the fashion of a Japanese uttering a joke, and answered:

"Honorable sir, do you for a moment imagine I should offer canal-bred eels to such a judge as yourself? No, no! you know that I have a high reputation and buy nothing but the most beautiful eels that come from the Sumida. Remembering that I have a reputation for you I have kept five, I have saved some of the finest fish you ever saw. Would you like to come into the kitchen and inspect them?"

"Ha!" gently added his wife, who had listened to his speech with increasing interest; "that is so. We have some eels fit for a daimio."

"What do you say?" inquired my companion. "Would you like to visit the culinary department?"

"Not until I have dined," I answered, suiting my modest order of daikon (pickled radish) that issued from a rear apartment. "You know the old proverb, 'Do not make the acquaintance of the cook until the feast is over.' If I relish the eels I may feel like learning how they are prepared."

We slipped all our clogs and followed our hostess up a broad ladder to the floor above, which was divided by sliding screens of paper into a number of apartments. Here we were greeted by a score of chubby-faced, cherry-lipped, neatly-dressed attendants, who knelt and welcomed us with profound bows.

"Which room do you prefer?" said the mistress. "This is not a busy hour, and most of the apartments are vacant."

My companion thought a while, as though deciding an important matter, then haughtily replied:

"We will occupy the one over the extension. I always feel at home there."

The woman led the way, and we entered a small, little, matted room, about 12x12 feet, the sole adornment of which were two hanging pictures representing Ebisu and Dai-koku—gods of luck. Placing cushions on the floor, she invited us to seat ourselves upon them, prostrated herself, bowed gracefully, and retired. In a few moments, a black-eyed waitress, with her hair polished like ebony and decorated with a single gold pin, entered with a box containing live charcoal for the pipe, and, after depositing the apparatus on the floor between us, knelt, bowed and sat upon her heels, glanced modestly downward, and awaited our order.

My friend, who was what we term rather "airy," being a small official in the Foreign Office, glanced patronisingly at the girl and said: "Bring us some titbits with which to amuse ourselves, then serve the broiled eels as fast as we require them. Mind, we don't want fish that have been cooked an hour. My guest is a gentleman who appreciates hot food. What have you on tap?"

"Honorable sir, for

THE Painters' Union, Branch No. 15, met last Friday at No. 192 Washington street, President Barry in the chair. Nine new members were admitted. An animated discussion prevailed on the question of wages. The best painters do not average more than $2.50 per day, and they expressed themselves decidedly against anything less than $3. In fact, there was a strong sentiment prevailing to demand $3.50 for A 1 painters. As a result of the discussion a committee was delegated to draft a petition, which will be presented to the employing painters, asking a percentage of advance, such percentage to be suggested by the committee and approved by the union.

MARTIN BOCK, who formerly operated a tannery at No. 35 Blair street, was arrested yesterday by Constable Eckert, taken before Justice Brayton, and assumed of embezzlement. The case was partially heard, and then continued. It appeared from the evidence taken that the difficulty was between Bock and the firm of Greene, Hesock & Co., for whom he did some tanning. The firm intrusted him with the raw stock, and he returned the finished leather. In some way not explained a difference of about $6,000 arose between the two establishments, and Bock's arrest was the result. The defense claims that the action is one brought to collect a debt, and not criminal property.

The wife of the deceased testified that her husband was a native of Germany, 40 years of age, and a merchant at Hammond, Ind. He left home on the 8th for the purpose of attending to some law business in this city, and was then apparently in perfect health. No one testified that Mr. F. G. Dee, attorney for Mrs. Tapper, which, by the way, were the first to look up the facts in the case, forward blanks, having other business requisite to the return of the deceased, in some way not explained a difference of about $6,000 arose between the two establishments, and Book

WHY DESPOND?

For The Chicago Tribune.

Why despond? The faintest, weakest pulse
Extends in worth an atmosphere of sighs.
Work! till the muscles harden with contraction—
Till from the heart a purer stream shall rise:
Labor will fill the soul with satisfaction,
And thro' the clouds shall pierce thy strength-ened eyes.

Why despond? If weak and sorely driven—
If poisoned or depleted, life's supply—
Still call again thy wonted strength be given—
Still Nature does an antidote supply;
Calm thy tired soul with thoughts of God and Heaven—
Be that sweet rest that cometh by-and-by.

Why despond? Though all unfit for toiling—
Though fell disease deny a moment's rest—
Wait! till the voice of Love, from Heaven calling,
Shall bid thee Home, to dwell among the blest:
There, imperfection, pain, and fruitless moiling
Shall end reward, relief, joy unexpressed.

Despair not! God's mercy never faileth;
Some compensation for each pang is sent;
Whatever ill thy soul or body aileth,
Know God's love, hath only good intent:
Have faith! Fear not! that spirit never quaileth
Thro' works, and waits, and rests—in all content.

Adulterated Beer in New York.

New York Herald.

It is reported that New York brewers are exercised in mind through fear that Commissioner Wells may tell what he knows of the secrets of their trade. They claim that the information which he possesses was given him in confidence, and he therefore has no right to disclose it. The Commissioner denies that he is bound to keep the evil doings about brewing to himself, and that instead of their being held by him in confidence he has heard them a second time through the Moderation Society, which presumably obtained them through the analyses which it is known to have made. As, however, there would be no betrayment for Mr. Raum to tell unless there is something which he believes should be known, the public ought to hear the whole story. The beer is made from hops, malt, and water; these contains these and none other harmful ingredients, otherwise the small quantities would very scarcely disturb the life stomach and head, as some beer certainly does. Drinkers have an undoubted right to know what they are drinking, and if the brewers are afraid to tell, so much worse for the brewers.

SCHWATKA'S SEARCH.

No more interesting tale of Arctic exploration has been written than the account of Lieut. Schwatka's sledging party in search of the records of the Franklin expedition, and described in a most graphic manner by Mr. Gilder, the second in command. The latter gentleman was the correspondent of the New York Herald, and much of the matter herein contained has been already published in that journal. The important feature of this expedition lies in the fact that the five members composing it were left for two years in the Arctic regions without any depot from which to draw supplies, and were therefore compelled to live like the natives of the frozen land and to adopt their manners and customs, or their lives would speedily have paid the forfeit of their daring ventures. During eighteen months the party of four white men and one "Eskimo" performed a sledge journey of 3,250 miles, during which their courage, energy, endurance, and perseverance were severely tested. In its main purpose the expedition was a failure. It did not find the Franklin records, but it did ascertain definitely that they had been destroyed, found the remains of many of Franklin's crew, and brought home for burial the bones of Lieut. Irving, an officer of the Terror. In geographical results the expedition accomplished all that was to have been expected of it. By some carelessness no map is given which shows its journeyings, although such a map is constantly referred to. The book has been hurriedly printed while its author is absent on another Arctic trip on the Rodgers, and has therefore many faults in the proof-reading and some ridiculous errors in the text as a consequence. Mr. Gilder was not a scientist, and the accuracy of some of his statements may be fairly questioned. He makes a serious charge against the Captain of the Eothen, the vessel which took them to the Arctic, to the effect that after they had started on their journey the vessel actually carried away the provisions belonging to them, and upon which they depended for the succeeding year while awaiting a return vessel, and for the want of which they nearly perished of famine.

We have not space for more than one or two of the many extracts marked in reading. During their journey Mr. Gilder says: "We ate quantities of reindeer tallow with our meat, probably about half our daily food. Breakfast is eaten raw and frozen, but we generally have a warm meal in the evening. Fuel is hard to obtain, and consists entirely of a vine-like moss. Reindeer tallow is also used for light. . . . Eating such quantities of tallow is a great benefit in this climate, and we can easily see the effect of it in the comfort with which we meet the cold. The January proved the coldest month of our experience, with the mean thermometer of —53.3 degrees, lowest —71 degrees, and the highest —38 degrees Fahrenheit. . . . Our meat had to be eaten cold—that is, frozen as we cut it off, to be sawed, and then broken into convenient-sized lumps, which, when first put into the mouth, were like stones. . . . The country began to swarm with wolves now. Equeeah killed two by the most infernal traps ever devised. He stuck keenly sharpened knife-blades in the ice, and covered them with blood, which the wolves licked, at the same time slicing their tongues, the cold keeping them from feeling the wounds at the time, and their own warm blood tempting them to continue until their tongues were so scarified that death was inevitable. He also prepared some pills by rolling up long strips of whalebone, bound with sinew and hidden in meat, which, freezing, would hold together until it had passed into the animal's intestines, when the meat having thawed and the sinew digested, the whalebone would open out and produce an agonizing death."

Mr. Gilder thus sums up the results of the expedition: "We had traveled (in one year) 2,819 geographical, or 3,251 statute miles, most of which was entirely over unexplored territory. . . . Our sledge journey stands conspicuous as the only one ever made through the entire course of an Arctic winter and one regarded by the Esquimaux as exceptionally cold. . . . The party successfully withstood the lowest temperature ever experienced by white men in the field . . . it is the first in which the white men voluntarily lived exclusively upon the same fare as their Esquimaux assistants. . . . The expedition was the first to make a summer search over the route of the lost crews of the Erebus and Terror, and while so doing buried the remains of every member of that fated party above ground. The most important and direct result of the labors of the expedition will be considered the establishing the loss of the Franklin records at the boat place in Starvation Cave." This volume is well illustrated and handsomely printed in clear large type on excellent paper. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York, are the publishers.

MR. HOWELLS' NEW NOVEL.

"Doctor Breen's Practice" is the title of W. D. Howells' latest novel. It is the story of a young girl who, when not yet out of her teens, had an unhappy love affair, which is always in the book referred to as "a disappointment." Her guardian fiancé marries her dearest girl-friend. The blow was a cruel one, but it did not crush her. She sank out of sight for a time, and was heard of after several years as a student of medicine in New York. Graduating from college, she planned beginning her practice in company with an older physician in one of the great factory towns of New England. Pending the completion of this arrangement, she goes to "Jocelyn's" (a seaside resort) with her mother and her invalid friend, just arrived from the West, named Mrs. Maynard. In this unexpected guest Dr. Breen finds her first patient, and the story begins, and we might also say ends, at "Jocelyn's." Mrs. Breen, the mother, "was an old lady who had once kept a very vigilant conscience for herself, but after making her life unhappy with it for some three-score years, now applied it entirely to the exasperation and condemnation of others, especially of her daughter whom she kept in a state of perpetual self questioning." The girl hasn't a ray of humor in her character; neither does she understand exaggeration of any kind. So when her patient, Mrs. Maynard, tells her that her husband is cruel and neglectful of her, and that she is about to get a divorce, Dr. Breen believes her statements implicitly. Then an old acquaintance of Mr. Maynard appears in the person of a Mr. Libby. He knows nothing of Mrs. M.'s intentions as to a divorce and treats her very cordially as the wife of his friend. A moonlight walk follows. Dr. Breen's conscience cries out against the apparent sin of her friend, surely unaware that young Libby has passed the time talking about and finding out all he could of the heroine of the story and of her past life. The next day Mrs. Maynard tells Grace that she is going for a sail with Mr. Libby. Grace sees Mr. L. and tries to prevent their going. Mr. Libby, delighted to please her in any way, says to Mrs. Maynard, as she comes out to them, that he "hopes she won't mind its being a little rough." "Indeed I won't I'm fond of it," she cries. Whereupon Dr. Breen's conscience is all alive, and she looks at Libby with eyes of reproach as he departs from the strict truth, and says to her friend, "I wish you to go. I will take the risk of all the harm that may come from the bad weather." After a great deal of persuasion Mrs. Maynard goes. Although she sees no signs of a storm, the weather changes suddenly, and a terrible storm comes upon them. Grace, who is in the boat, sees there are men watching the little boat pitch and toss about, while four of them go out to the rescue. The boat is capsized, but all are saved. Grace is crushed with, "Well, Grace, I hope you are satisfied. All the time I was clinging to that wretched boat I was wondering how you would feel. Yes, my last thoughts were of you. I pitied you. I didn't see how you could ever have peace again." Although Mrs. Maynard is very much alive when brought ashore, she becomes very ill, and in due course of time insists on having another doctor, so Dr. Breen gives over her case to Dr. Mulbridge, while she takes the subordinate position of nurse. During this long illness Grace has to make journeys of Mr. Libby very often, and they go long distances together. On one of these expeditions he tells her he loves her. She refuses him. Dr. Mulbridge, the clever country doctor, before whose will everything bends, has also taken a great fancy to Grace. Meeting Dr. Breen, and after carrying Mrs. Maynard through a severe attack of pneumonia and landed her safely in her husband's arms, the venerable doctor startles the girl by an offer of marriage. The resistless power of the doctor will carry, about her and almost crushes her. Despite her refusal he tells her she will consent in time; that he will trust to her conscience. "You mustn't trust to my conscience, she says. "I fling it away! I won't have anything to do with it. I've been tortured enough by it. There is no rest or justice in it." He laughs and tells her he will see her the "day after tomorrow." Grace rushes back to her mother's room and pours out a torrent of abuse against duty and plans of doing good, thereby making oneself miserable, and causing Mrs. Breen to exclaim "I should think you had taken leave of your conscience." She says: "I hope I have, mother. I am going to the theatre and the opera, and I hope there'll be a ballet; and I should like to do wrong and I will do wrong if it looks right to Harry Libby." In despair she writes a note to Mr. Libby, and meets him when going for a messenger to take it to him. It ends in her telling him that she loves him. Dr. Mulbridge does not wait the time fixed, but calls the next day. Grace is overcome with the same feeling of helplessness and terror in his presence, and it is not until she has her hand on the knob of the door and knows that he can't prevent her escape that she tells him what manner of man she thinks he is. Her marriage with Mr. Libby is happy enough, and she and her Mrs of usefulness in caring for the poor and sick children in her husband's factory.

How natural this scene in a country store:

"As he passed down the long sandy street toward the corner where his store stood, the broodings of the loafers, waiting in Hackett's store for the distribution of the mail, watched him through the open door, and from under the boughs of the weather-beaten poplar before it. Hackett had been cutting a plug of tobacco out of the thick yellow disk before him for the Widow Holman, and he stared at the street after Mulbridge passed, as if his mental eye had nailed him there for the public consideration, while he leaned over the counter and held by the point the long knife with which he had cut the chunk."

"'I see some the folks from over to Jocelyn's yist'-d'y,' he said, in a spasm of sharp, crackling speech, 'and they seemed to think 't Mis' Mulbridge 'd got to step round pretty spry.' I s'pose she didn't want another the same name in the house with her.'

"A long silence followed, in which no one changed in any wise the posture in which he found himself. Then Hackett began to speak. Cap'n George Wray, tilted back against the wall in his chair, continued to stare at the storekeeper; Cap'n Jabez Wray did not look up from whittling the chair between his legs; their cousin, Cap'n Wray Storrell, seated on a nail keg near the stove, ceased for a moment from the pipe with the end of a stiff, cast-off envelope; two other Captains, more or less akin to them, continued their game of checkers; the Widow Seth Wray's boy rested immovable, with his chin and hand on the counter, where he had been trying since the Widow Holman went out to catch Hackett's eye and buy a corn-ball. Old Cap'n Billy Wray was the first to break the spell. He took his cigar from his mouth and held it between his shaky hands and fondling, while he puckered his lips for speech. 'Jabez,' he said, 'did Cap'n Sam'l git that coalier?'

"'No,' answered the whittler, cutting deeper into his chair, 'she didn't signal for him till she got into the channel, and then he'd got a couple o' passengers for London; and Cap'n Jim brought her up.'

"'I don't know,' said Cap'n Billy, with a stiff yet tremulous reference of himself to the storekeeper, 'as spryness would help her, as long as he took the bodies.' 'I guess he's a master of his own ship. Who's he going to marry? The grass widow got well enough?'

"'No. As I understand,' crackled the storekeeper, 'her husband's turned up. Folks over there seem to think he's got his eye on the other doctor.'

"'Going to marry with her, hey? Well, if either o' 'em gets sick they won't have to go far for advice, and they won't have any doctor's bills to pay. Still, I shouldn't a' picked out just that kind of a wife for him.'

"'As I understand, it was the doctor began; but here he caught sight of Widow Seth Wray's boy, and asked, 'What's wanted, Bub? Cornball?' and turning to take that sweetmeat from the shelf behind him he added the rest in the mouth of the hobbledy reverberating 'Sir, 'She's got prop'ty.'

"'Well, I never knew a Mulbridge yet 't objected to prop'ty—especially other folks'.'

"'Barlow, he's tellin' round that she's very fine appearin.' He handed the corn-ball to Widow Seth Wray's boy, who went noiselessly out on his bare feet.

"'Mr. Howells' American girls are much more pleasing and natural characters than those painted by Mr. James. His stories are simpler, the poetic vein more pronounced. His literary style is fascinating, but does not seek for dramatic effects. His books end satisfactorily, yet in entire harmony with his plot. It always seems right that they should end as they do. Incidentally Mr. Howells weaves into the warp of his fiction many delicately truthful and not a little quiet humor. We can even fancy hearing his quiet chuckle at the chagrin of the strongminded as he places before them in sharp outline the opinion entertained by women of physicians of their own sex. And how the book will fly to the throats of those women when the female doctor heroine marries the society young man and gives up her profession forever. Doctor Breen starts in life with the idea of benefiting her own sex, and ends by doing her best to make rivals for herself. We believe "Doctor Breen's Practice" will be considered the best of Mr. Howells' works, outranking even his "Undiscovered Country," to which the palm has previously been assigned. It is a thoroughly pleasant, wholesome work, which all readers will find very enjoyable.

NATURE AND FUNCTION OF ART.

"It is the object of this volume to inquire into the present condition of Architecture; to define the nature and function of Art in general, and of Architecture in particular, in order to show how Architecture may again become a living and creative art." Such is Mr. Eidlitz's introduction to his rather ponderous work on architecture. If this author's practice in his profession is based on the same theories as his writings his work certainly must be massive. Mr. Eidlitz is at home in the chapter devoted to a discussion of the shortcomings and cant of his professional brethren. Here he will find hearty cooperation among all earnest artists desirous only of the elevation and continued progress toward perfection of their art. What he has to say in the way of truth-finding is earnestly and conscientiously done, and in fact earnestness is the impelling motive of this writer. The last part of the volume is much more satisfactory than the first half, in which we are furnished with a subject for the painter's brush, to be called the "Puzzled Metaphysician." Here is a scrap of sound, practical advice:

"Above all things do not search for special effects. Do not expand a plain country house into a palace, nor squeeze it into a cottage, nor into any known or given shape because you admire that shape more than others."

Mr. Eidlitz's work will commend itself to the architectural profession. It is plainly but substantially bound, with many illustrations, and published in New York by A. C. Armstrong & Son.

ENGLISH CHURCH ARCHITECTURE.

An "essay" covering nearly 200 pages is a somewhat elaborate production. Too much body for the size of the head! Nevertheless it is a magnificent work—this "Essay on the History of English Church-Architecture Prior to the Separation of England from the Roman Obedience"—and will be heartily welcomed by members of the profession, for whom it has been especially prepared. The author's aim has been, he says, to exhibit the architectural art of Christendom as a part of the great fact of Christianity; to deal with the church architecture of our own country as but a portion of a great whole, and to display the essential solidarity of the history of Christian art in England with that of Christian art in general, and of Christianity itself. And the text gives a continuous history of the subject from the point of view taken. The engravings are finely executed, and the volume is both valuable and interesting, as a special work on a special subject for a special class of men. Imported by Scribner & Welford.

ENCYCLOPÆDIA BRITANNICA.

The thirteenth volume of this, the chief of all encyclopædias, is now ready, and runs from INF—KAN. The "American" articles in this number are on "Iowa," by Henry Gannett; on "Washington Irving," by Richard Garnett; and on "Jefferson," by John Bigelow. Prof. Robertson Smith has essays on "Jerusalem," on "The Book of Judges," and on "Joel." The subject of "Ireland" is treated by T. P. Henderson, W. K. Sullivan, and Richard Barwell. Among other contributors to this volume are: James Parton, Prof. Sayce, Prof. Jebb, the Rev. T. K. Cheyne, Sir G. C. Rawlinson, J. A. Symonds, Lady Brassey, Canon Farrar, M. D. Conway, Lord Stanmore, George Saintsbury, and Prof. Ward.

Referring to the articles by American authors, it may be pounded whether Mr. Garnett's statement that Irving was not "characteristically an American author" is correct. If he was not, then pray who is? He is lowered by the statement that had he been of Western origin he might have been the "first Western humorist" and "his humor might have gained in depth and richness." This is an extraordinary remark. Then the characteristics and excellence of the West when Irving lived could have improved his perfect style or imparted greater finish to the delicacy of his humor is rather paradoxical. On the whole, however, the article is well written and Irving's abilities estimated at their just value. Mr. Garnett's essay on "Iowa" has the merit of brevity, and treats of that great State after the formula used in the description of those already given. Mr. Bigelow condenses into a small space the leading facts in Jefferson's life—a matter a remarkable feat for Mr. Bigelow, who is generally diffuse and heavy. He has had some experience in biographical writing. The author of the article on "John Jay" is not named. Among the principal contents of this volume—in the preparation of which special writers have been engaged—are: Infanticide, Inquisition, Insanity, Iron, Inscriptions, Inspiration, Insurance, International Law, Irrigation, Italy, Japan, Jaundice, Jesuits, Jupiter, Kaleidoscope, Kant, and Kamchatka. The work comes to us from Little, Brown & Co., of Boston.

BRIEF MENTION.

"Your Mission" is the title of a pretty little work in verse neatly illustrated by competent artists, and so bound as to make it a gift-book for the holidays. The writer of the musical verse is Ellen M. H. Gates.

"Volcanoes" is the title of a volume in the "International Scientific Series" prepared by Prof. John W. Judd. Its title indicates the theme of which it treats. Mr. Judd's aim has been to deduce from the study of existing volcanoes those general laws which appear to govern volcanic action. The author's researches have been exhaustive, his style is pleasing, and the volume interesting.

"Common Sense About Women" contains a series of essays on women by Thomas Wentworth Higginson. There is not a family in the land but what has a direct and personal interest in the subject, and it is one to which Col. Higginson brings long experience and a forcible pen. The articles have already been published in the Woman's Journal.

"The Fortunate Island and Other Stories" is a collection of amusing stories by "Max Adeler." The fun is beaten rather thin to cover so much space, but there is some humor and originality in the different chapters.

"A Peculiar People" promises us as being of the trash, trashy. The scene is in Syria, and there is no doubt but that the Maronites of Lebanon are a very "peculiar people" indeed. Why the book was written, is a question the reader will not find answered in the text. For whom it was written will be equally difficult to ascertain, since each individual will be ready to declare that it could not have been for him. It is uninteresting, and lacking in any symptoms of vitality.

A very handsome edition of Goldsmith's works, edited by Cunningham, in four volumes, has just been issued by Harper Bros. It is a library edition from new plates, with wide margins, uncut edges, and put up in a box. The print is uniform with that of Macaulay, Hume, Morley, and others from the same house.

The third volume of "Letters of Charles Dickens" consists of letters only, and has been edited and prepared by his niece (Georgina Hogarth) and his eldest daughter. This final volume comprises his correspondence with Lord Lytton and Mr. Austin Layard, and many letters to intimate friends on both sides of the ocean, as well as to members of his family.

The value of such works as "Lessons in Figure Painting in Water-Colors" and "Flower Painting in Water-Colors" is chiefly for those who have not a natural eye for mixing colors. Both the works referred to are handsomely gotten up, and, with the restriction mentioned, should admirably subserve their purpose.

Mr. Kendig has been somewhat of a traveler, and during his wanderings took full and frequent notes of all that he saw. Elaborating these notes he has published a volume entitled "Sketches of Travel," which does not, so far as we can see, contain any very new or startling information. Every tourist is apt to believe that the impressions made upon his mind by what he sees must necessarily be novel, and his deductions theoretical important. It is a mistake. However, Mr. Kendig has written pleasantly enough, and embodied in his chapters considerable previously accessible information.

Mr. E. A. Freeman is a rare writer. To whatever subject he devotes himself his examination goes to the foundations, and his literary style is always as admirable as his mode of presentation is entertaining. "Sketches from the Subject and Neighbor Lands of Venice" embodies the results of his Venetian work. To a man of his learning this book is not sufficient. Those interested in archæological works will readily admit that it is fascinating, and we believe that it will prove delightful reading for any one. Want of space prevents the many extended references to its pages which we should like to make. Mr. Freeman's name alone is a magnet for the careful reader, and once attracted it is difficult to leave the perusal of his works.

Mr. Rossetti is a dainty poet. He is to the art poetic what the genre painter is to the art of painting. His work in its class is nearly perfect, and his "Ballads and Sonnets" has won for him his enviable reputation. The present volume contains the sonnets already published, as well as some new ones. They are all in the same key, but the versification is admirable.

The volume of "Extracts from Thackeray's Writings" has apparently no author. It is a series of classified selections from the works of the great novelist, whose every volume is a treasure-house and nearly every word a gem. It is a marvel that the work has not been done before. As it is it has been well done, and readers of the volume will meet in its pages some of their dearest friends.

A new edition of the successful novel, "Hopes and Fears," by the author of "Orsino Castle," has been issued in London by Macmillan. There is probably an unusual demand for works of fiction on Ireland and Irish topics at present. The real and historical portion is not especially entertaining reading.

A second edition of Thomas Pitt Taswell-Langmead's "English Constitutional History from the Teutonic Conquest to the Present Time" has been issued in London and reprinted in this country. The first edition has been revised throughout, with additions. Two chapters have been entirely rewritten. Primarily designed as a text-book for students, it is also sufficiently interesting to find favor with the general reader. As a history of the English Constitution is substantially a history of our own, the volume will prove acceptable to American readers.

Mr. Hensel's two volumes on "the Mendelssohn family, 1729 to the present time" are disappointing—not that they are uninteresting, but that they treat too much of the family and too little of its most celebrated member. Readable these two volumes certainly are, but we fail to see wherein any addition is made to what has been already published. Mr. Hensel is not a model biographical writer. The Mendelssohn family was a remarkable and talented one, and the glimpses given of its inner life are pleasing and profitable. The volume is made up mainly of letters and journals giving the domestic history of four generations. The volumes will be welcome additions to any library.

"Odgers on the Law of Libel and Slander" is an English law-book of which Melville M. Bigelow has prepared an American edition. The American cases cited are as late as September, 1881. This branch of jurisprudence is constantly becoming of increasing importance. The volume before us is undoubtedly as carefully prepared and accurate a treatise on the subject as has yet been issued. It is a thorough and exhaustive work, and Mr. Bigelow was especially well qualified for the preparation of the volume for use this side of the water. The rules of practice, forms, and precedents which it contains, and its details concerning the conduct of cases, will prove as serviceable here as in England. Little, Brown & Co. are the American publishers.

Some of the best of the shorter poems of Longfellow, Emerson, Whittier, Lowell, Bryant, and Aldrich have been selected and illustrated by etchings and vignets, then bound handsomely for the holiday season. The artists who have furnished their work are A. F. Bellows, Samuel Colman, Henry Farrer, R. S. Gifford, and J. D. Smillie. The pictures are of uneven merit, but all are much above the usual run in illustrated works, and it is interesting to compare the differing styles of these excellent artists. The frontispiece is admirable, so are Mr. Smillie's snow-storm, Mr. Farrer's "Twilight," and Gifford's illustration of the "Baron of St. Castine." The collection is one that will be highly prized by every fortunate recipient.

"Studies in Modern Art" is undoubtedly the most superb, and, for the price, the cheapest, art work we have yet seen. The book is bound in vellum, elaborately decorated with white, blue, and black pencilings, and stamped in gold. The volume contains a series of monographs on the leading French artists of the day by the artistic Edward Strahan, and contains ten independent steel engravings, many fac-similes of original drawings by the artists, and between fifty and sixty initials and head and tail pieces, all of the best and finest work in the line of art, printed in tint with borders. In the text may be found a description of the modern French school, and such painters as Gérôme, Meissonier, Diaz, de Neuville, Le Poitevin, Cot, Bouguereau, Cabanel, Baudry, Pelouse, Corot, Rousseau, Chintreuil, Daubigny, Tissot, Bastien, Brion, Dore, Millet, Weber, Lambert, Ranson, Rudaux, Soudray, Adam, Wolf, Lalauze, and the engraving Gaujean, Rajon, Prudhon, Gusman, Baude-Cloarec, Amsler, Mathieu, Gilbert, and Hanson. Numbers are all represented, with fine specimens of their work.

Referring to the artists by American authors, it may be pounded whether Mr. Garnett's statement that Irving was not "characteristically an American author" is correct. If he was not, then pray who is? He is lowered by the statement that had he been of Western origin he might have been the "first Western humorist" and "his humor might have gained in depth and richness." This is an extraordinary remark. Sorghum Sugar.

THE TRIBUNE has received from the Agricultural Department at Washington a series of diagrams showing the average results of analyses of sorghums for the years 1879, 1880, and 1881, indicating great progress in the art of making sugar of good quality from several varieties of sorghum. The experiments being made in this connection by Commissioner Loring are creditable to the department, and will be of importance to farmers. In this connection the results of a series of experiments made during the seasons of 1880 and 1881 by Profs. Weber and Scovell, of the Illinois Industrial University, will be read with interest. A pamphlet has just been issued by the Regent of the university containing the report of the gentlemen who have had the matter in charge, from which the following data is taken:

The object of the investigations made upon sorghum-cane at the Illinois Industrial University was to settle, if possible, the much-disputed question whether sugar could be made from the juice of a manufacturing size and with commercial success. From the many conflicting reports relating to this matter no definit conclusions could be drawn, and it was found necessary, in order to prosecute our work in an intelligent manner, to treat the whole subject anew in a thorough field of investigation. It has been claimed by many that the proper sphere of the sorghum industry is the production of sirup, and a great deal of good work has been accomplished in improving the quality and yield of this article. But what may have been true for sorghum a few years ago does not hold good today. The sorghum industry is at the present time confronted by another enemy; the grid-iron, which, although still in its infancy, has already shown its superiority in the production of sirup both in regard to the quality and quality. This statement is made with due consideration of the many attacks which the glucose industry has of late received. Glucose as an article of food is equal if not superior to cane sugar, and its artificial production from corn or other amylaceous substances is a perfectly legitimate business. It is true, that it is discovered that some of the glucose injurious substances may be employed, and if the products sent to market are not perfectly free from them great injury may be done to the consumers. The same thing may be said for the making of cane sugar. But in either case the employment of injurious substances is not a necessity, and should be condemned by every one who is interested in public welfare. Glucose, when pure, is a good article of food, and no valid objection can be made to it in a sanitary point of view, when employed for any legitimate purpose to which it is adapted. The sorghum industry must regard the manufacture of cane sugar as its competitor, and the latter will never lose in importance by any unjustifiable attacks or criticisms. From these considerations it seems evident that the production of sirup alone can no longer maintain the sorghum industry in a place which, it would rather seem, to give it the name of an industry.

To accomplish this sorghum growers should turn all their attention and energy to the production of crystallizable sugar, which glucose, in its present different properties, can never replace, and which will always find a ready market, free from all competition.

These circumstances led to the investigations about to be described, and the results exceeded our most sanguine expectations. Our experiments, both scientific and practical, have shown beyond a doubt, not only that the manufacture of sugar from sorghum in our own state is practicable, but also that it will be highly remunerative, when undertaken on a large scale.

Up to the present time sorghum-seed has never found a proper utilization. Although in its composition it resembles other grains, such as corn, the amount of tannin contained in it, as our analysis given farther on shows, will no doubt prevent its liberal use as food for animals. Knowing that immense quantities of it will consequently be produced as soon as the sorghum-sugar industry is introduced, we have given this matter careful study, and have found that the seed is eminently adapted for the production of glucose. We have prepared the glucose directly from the grain, and without the tedious and expensive process of first separating the starch. The great advantage of this industry to the sorghum industry will appear when it is considered that the seed, which, when the cane is cut, is cast aside until the sugar season is over, and can afterwards be manufactured into glucose with the same machinery now used in making sugar from the cane, is a requirement for the balance of the year to the works, which otherwise would have to be idle for eight or ten months annually.

Our work occupied two distinct fields of experiment: first, scientific investigations, to ascertain the nature of sorghum-cane was studied; second, practical experiments in making sugar.

The objects of these analyses were: (1.) To ascertain the development and changes of the sugar in the plant during its growth. (2.) To notice the changes which the cane undergoes after reaching the maximum stage in the quality and quantity of its saccharine matter; first, when left in the field uncovered; second, standing stripped two weeks; third, cut and tied under shelter. (3.) To ascertain the profit of the sugar yielded in sugar. (4.) To study the nature of different varieties of soils on the development of sugar in the cane. (5.) To determine the effect of freshly manured soils on the development of sugar in sorghum. (6.) To compare the different varieties of sorghum as to quantity and quality.

These examinations were conducted in the following manner:

On the dates specified, ten average stalks were taken from the given field, stripped, topped and boiled for ten minutes, then cut off one foot above the ground. The stripped and topped cane was crushed in a thoroughly cleaned Victor mill. The juice was collected in a tin pan, and after being cooled down to 68 deg. C., the sp. gr. was noted, then 10 c. c. were put into a graduated cylinder for the estimation of grape sugar, and 10 c. c. were put into another for determining the amount of cane sugar.

The estimation of grape-sugar the 10 c. c. reserved for this purpose were diluted so as to contain exactly 1 c. c. and the grape-sugar was determined by Fehling's solution.

The portion reserved for cane-sugar was diluted, 15 drops of dilute sulphuric acid added, and the whole heated over a water bath for one hour. A mixture was then allowed to cool, 10 c. c. hydrate of lime added to alkaline reaction, diluted to 100 c. c., and the total amount of sugar determined with Fehling's solution. The difference between the grape and total sugar was estimated as cane-sugar by multiplying by 0.95.

The glucose after having several distinct variations of case, the experiments in every case being identical in method, say:

It appears that the Amber is best adapted for the production of cane-sugar. The Orange and Honey can also be employed advantageously in the manufacture of cane-sugar, as they mature later, their yield is greater per acre, and this has no doubt would compensate for less production of cane-sugar. The sugar contained in the Amber, No. 1, of the Chinese cane seems to indicate that it would be valuable for the production of crystallizable sugar.

The experiments made during 1880, are thus referred to in the report:

In the experiments which follow, the juice was either evaporated directly after it came from the mill, i. e., without the use of re-agents, or after it had been submitted to clarification treatment. In the first, the juice is designated in the experiment as not clarified, in the second, as clarified, defecated, or neutralized.

No. 1. Amber—Sp. gr. 15. Cane, very ripe and green tops, not stripped—evaporated to a sp. gr. 1.1500 weighed eleven pounds of sirup. It was of a light color and had a pleasant taste. Sp. gr. of juice, 1.0700; weight of juice, 10 pounds; % of juice, 66.; yielding a sirup of 1.1500 sp. gr. The sugar, not crystallized.

No. 2. Amber—Sp. gr. 15. Juice defecated. The tops were broken from the mill, milk of lime added, boiled a little time, until a piece of white paper held in the steam turned yellow, when it was taken off and the juice allowed to settle. The clear juice was then carefully drawn off, and the sediment washed with water. The juice was then boiled down to a sirup. The sirup was then cooled and filtered through a cloth, and allowed to stand for a week or more before being boiled to sugar. The sugar was then dissolved in water, and the juice made alkaline with a little milk of lime, and treated with sulphurous acid gas, and then with animal black and filtered through a cloth. The clear sirup was then boiled to sugar. The sugar was not clarified, but was washed with water. A small portion of the sugar was dissolved, and the sirup added to the main bulk. The sugar was then dried in a warm place. The sugar, not crystallized.

No. 3. Amber—Sp. gr. 15. Juice defecated. The juice was made alkaline with milk of lime, and treated with sulphurous acid gas, and then with animal black, and filtered through a cloth. The clear sirup was then boiled to sugar. The sugar was washed with water. The sugar, not crystallized.

No. 4. Amber—Sp. gr. 15. Juice defecated. The juice was made alkaline with milk of lime, and treated with sulphurous acid gas, and then with animal black, and filtered through a cloth. The clear sirup was then boiled to sugar. The sugar was washed with water. The sugar, not crystallized.

No. 5. Orange—Sept. 23. Juice neutralized with milk of lime; the sirup treated with tannin and gelatine added; evaporated to a sirup of twelve pounds to the gallon; sirup dark. The sugar commenced crystallizing in a few days. Three weeks afterwards the sugar was separated from the sirup by a centrifugal sugar-drainer.

In this experiment 200 lbs of topped and stripped stalks were used, producing 156 lbs of juice (49 per cent), 18 lbs sirup (7.19 per cent of the stalks and 11.54 per cent of the juice), 19½ lbs sugar (9.5 per cent of stalks, 9.97 per cent of juice, 60.1 per cent sirup).

One row, .0088 acres, yielded 80 lbs juice. Calculating the yield of an acre from these data, we have 724 gallons juice, 128.3 gallons, or 1,647.3 lbs sirup, and 756.97 lbs sugar.

6. Orange—Sept. 26. Juice neutralized with lime, and a few drops of tannin added to every 10 gallons juice, then ¼ oz. gelatine, and afterwards a little sulphate of alumina. Juice evaporated to a sirup of 11 lbs to the gallon; color, very light. Sugar began crystallizing after standing two days.

7. Orange—Sept. 27. Juice neutralized with lime, and concentrated to a sirup of 11 to 12 lbs per gallon. Sugar readily crystallized.

8. Orange—Sept. 27. Juice neutralized with milk of lime, sulphuric acid was added to combine with any lime remaining uncombined in the juice. The sugar began crystallizing as the sirup was cold.

9. Orange—Oct. 1. Juice defecated with lime and sulphate of alumina. Sugar began crystallizing after three days. In this experiment stripped and topped stalks were used, yielding 84.2 per cent of juice; specific gravity, 1.076.

10. Orange—Oct. 1. Juice evaporated without defecation. The sirup, after standing about five weeks, had but few crystals of sugar. In a subsequent analysis of fair sirup (see analysis of sirup No. 4) there was found to be 3.87 per cent of cane sugar and 36.91 per cent of grape sugar.

11. Orange—Juice not defecated; evaporated to a sirup of twelve pounds to the gallon. The sugar has not crystallized.

12. Amber—Juice defecated with lime and sulphate of alumina. The juice was quite acid as it came from the mill. Sirup black. Sugar crystallized.

Finding that some of the sirup whose juice had not been defecated did not crystallize, it was thought that perhaps a farther concentration would cause the sugar to crystallize. For this purpose the sirup produced in experiment No. 4 was selected, in the early part of November it was further concentrated in the steam evaporator, but this had no effect upon the crystallization of the sugar.

Finding that the concentration of the sirup did not cause the sugar to crystallize, an analysis of several of the sirups was undertaken, in order to investigate this subject more thoroughly. The following sirups were selected to be analyzed:

No. 1. Early Amber—Sirup taken from that made in experiment No. 2.

No. 2. Sirup of No. 1 subjected to further concentration.

No. 3. Orange—Sirup of experiment No. 9, with the crystallized sugar taken out by the centrifugal separator.

No. 4. Orange—Obtained from the sirup of experiment No. 10. The following were the results obtained:

Number.	Cane sugar.	Grape sugar.	Gum.	Water	Ash.	Total
No. 1..	47.22	14.19	9.80	22.4	1.97	100.1
No. 2..	45.43	20.00	10.61	20.20	2.78	100.0
No. 3..	25.49	26.32	6.75	38.67	1.49	99.27
No. 4..	22.9	28.91	7.80	34.04	1.75	96.40

The cause of the large per cent of ash shown by No. 2 was undoubtedly the lime added to neutralize the sirup before the second concentration.

From the proximate analysis of the cane it appears that one acre of sorghum produces 2,360 pounds of cane sugar. Of this amount we obtained 710 pounds in the form of good merchantable sugar, and 1,650 pounds were left in the 1,777 pounds of molasses drained from the sugar. Hence, 62 per cent of the total amount of sugar was lost or changed during the process of manufacture. This shows that the method of manufacture is general use is very imperfect.

The gentlemen who have made these experiments have more nearly approached success than ever before, and it now appears that the outcome of their researches will result in a general renewal of interest in the growth and manufacture of sugar from sorghum cane. There appears, however, to be one very serious drawback to the general adoption of the process by which Messrs. Weber & Scovell have demonstrated the practicability of manufacturing sugar from the cane. Having reached such a position as seemed to them to guarantee a grand success, the scientists were shrewd enough before divulging their secret to send on to Washington an application for a patent for their patent process, which, unfortunately, has just been granted. The chemists who have made these experiments and secured the patent were perhaps warranted in so doing, but as the college to which they are attached was founded as a public school for the general dissemination of useful knowledge as a State institution, it is altogether probable that steps will be taken at once to protect the people against their avaracious attempt to use the tools and appliances of the State to exact payment or royalty for an invention to discover which they were liberally paid. The attention of Gov. Cullom has been called to the matter, and it is also being seriously considered by the Faculty and board who manage the institution at Champaign. The people of the State of Illinois are justly entitled to the result of these valuable experiments, and it is to be hoped that the enterprising and seemingly speculative professors will be compelled to make their process the property of the general public.

Our Beef Breeds.

To the Editor of The Chicago Tribune.

UNIVERSITY, CHAMPAIGN, Ill., Dec. 21.—Discussions as to the value of different breeds of cattle continue from year to year, receiving new interest from the annual fairs. Agreement of opinion is hardly to be expected. We are all more or less influenced by self-interest or by prejudice. Some of us cling too strongly to old-time favorite. Each breed will continue to have its partisans. We are apt to be too sweeping in our praise or condemnation of a breed. No one is equally well adapted to all conditions. In old countries this fact is recognized. In Great Britain there are breeds which are now, as they long have been, confined to small areas, but which hold their own against all rivals in these limits. In this country we have too often attempted to force the general adoption of a favorit breed.

Variety of climate, soil, and modes of treatment make variety of breed essential. The breeds best suited for the temperate climate, abundant food, and good care of the Central Western States are not best, as pure bred, for either the far North, extreme South, or for the wild life, scant feed, and great exposure to which cattle are subject "on the plains."

Practical experience must be given the chief importance in deciding such questions. The men who produce beef are often prejudiced, often are slow to adopt improvements, but when they persist in giving their preference to any breed, or when they refuse to make use of another, after opportunities for comparison, it will not do to claim they are all wrong. We must accept as facts their statements that the one breed has fairly met their wants, and that there are valid objections to the other. Long-continued popularity is strong presumptive evidence of merit; long-continued lack of popularity is strong presumptive evidence of, at least, lack of adaptation.

The recognized improved "beef breeds" in this country are all from Great Britain—Devon, Hereford, Scotch Polled, and the Short-Horn. The latter is by far the most numerous and widely spread; the Hereford comes next in present popularity. The Scotch Polled are rather a breed of the future than of the present in this country. The Devons have enthusiastic friends, but are not growing much in numbers or popularity.

The Devon has much in its favor. Its rich red color, activity, hardiness, graceful form, good fattening qualities when matured, and the good quality of its flesh can all be highly extolled. Its grades and crosses are often excellent. But even the most enthusiastic friends of the breed cannot claim that it is widely popular. They wonder at the poor judgement of the mass of breeders and feeders, but admit that their favorit breed keeps in the background, both in England and in this country. It is well known here. It was introduced more than half a century ago. Why is it not now a leading breed? Chiefly because it lacks the size which the average beef-maker in this country wants, and because it does not mature as early as some other breeds. Devon steers on Illinois weighing over 4,000 pounds are comparatively seen, but at the recent Strathpeffer Ross-Shire Show the heaviest Devon steer—aged four years old, weighed only 1,797 pounds. And that is confessedly above the average of good Devons. For light meat, half Devons pulled by the Devons have been a favorit with butchers in the Connecticut Valley, where there is a market for the fore quarters, which are valued in the country at 10 cents per pound, while the hind quarters are sold at 5 cents. Yet, they make the most of the fore quarters, and, if we never heard of the half breeds, the Devons would be better appreciated in the general run in America.

The Shorthorns have had a chapter history. As a breed, they have always been and now are a fashionable breed in England, and are always sure to be popular. They are well known at the leading agricultural fairs and stock shows, and have taken their full share of prizes in competition with all other breeds. The sneers are frequently heard for generations in counties somewhat remote from the breeding districts, but the latter enlarges slowly, if at all. They were early introduced into this country, but for a long time attracted little attention. In some cases they disappeared as a distinct breed; in others a very few breeders kept up their herds, warmly praised them, but made few converts. In the last ten years, and especially within the last half dozen years, they have rapidly advanced in number and reputation. Breeding herds are established in many of the States; large numbers are imported; there is much demand at high prices and, today, the breed is as much talked of as any other, and its reputation is among the very best, with every prospect for increased popularity—well deserved. The average unprejudiced good judge of cattle, whether breeder, feeder, dealer, or butcher likes the Hereford when he sees good specimens. As a breed they have deep, well-rounded, compact bodies, especially good at the heart, with well sprung ribs, short legs, and every appearance of good constitutions and good feeding qualities. The head, horns, and neck are a trifle heavy; the brisket is often pretty large; the hide is thick, and often, but not always, the hindquarters are not as heavy comparatively as are the forequarters. The breed is confessedly one of the best for fattening on grass. The flesh is of superior quality. Early maturity is readily secured, and the weights are among the largest. As milkers the cows are barely medium. Natural to the Western States, in this country has the breed been very extensively crossed on others, but the grades in this country have often been unusually good. The breed is decidedly popular with most, perhaps all, who have tried it "on the plains," and for the improvement of the common cattle in the great ranches it has points in which it is unsurpassed—size, compactness, fair activity, hardiness. Its moderate milking capacity is not an objection for this use.

For regions in which milk is made almost equally important with beef, the breed is not so well adapted, and this one fact will prevent its taking a leading position in many parts of the country. It has not proved itself equally good for crossing with other breeds as has the Short-Horn. It is doubtful if it is best adapted for the general farmer. Ultimately it will, probably, become a leading breed in several sections of the country.

The Black Polled Scotch breeds—the Angus or Aberdeen, and, to a less extent, the Galloway—are becoming more popular in Great Britain and in this country. The Aberdeen was introduced several years ago, as well as the Angus in very small numbers, but attracted little attention until recently. The latter breed is now the more popular, and, probably, deservedly so. That these cattle are hornless is in their favor, although this point has been made too much of by some. They are compact, good feeders, of excellent formes, reasonable earliness of maturity, with decided good feeding qualities, and excellent beef, all who know them willingly admit. The writer has never seen a breed with which he was before so completely taken by surprise. Favorably impressed him as did these cattle two years ago at leading British shows. In some cases this breed has won great honor in competition with other breeds—notably at Paris in 1878. In the same year, at Paris, the Angus and the Short-Horn have been champion prize winners in Fat-Stock Shows. It is claimed that the cross from the Short-Horn bull on the Polled cow is better than that where the Polled bull is used. In the cases in which the Scotch Polled Scotch friends of the breed closed their eulogy to the writer with a claim for unequaled excellence for cross-bred steers, from a Short-Horn sire. These cattle have not much merit as milkers, and are not for the dairy farm. For the farmer. For the Northwest and the great plains they seem among the best breeds known, if not the very best.

The Short-Horn has had a history as remarkable as that of any other breed. Comparatively it is of recent origin, but is now by far the most widespread and numerous of any of the improved breeds of cattle in Great Britain and its colonies, and in America, as well as having a fair foothold on the Continent of Europe. It has now more nearly on the defensive than for a quarter of a century past, but it is more correct to say other breeds have increased in popularity than to charge that the Short-Horn has lost popularity. The breed has lost somewhat in consequence of its great popularity, and more in consequence of some whims of classes of breeders. In future it will not be so decidedly the best breed of the country, but there is little probability it will soon lose its place as the leading beef breed. It has the great advantages of general fair and sometimes extraordinary merit for milk, and of well-proven ability to improve common cattle almost everywhere. It can hardly be called a fault that the breed has made the most of the highest type of the Short-Horn is the equal of any other breed in beauty and symmetry. Large size, unusual early maturity, good feeding qualities the breed unquestionably possesses. That it could be better if, on an average, it had a trifle shorter legs and were fuller behind the shoulders ought not to be disputed. It is, however, unsurpassed in loin and hind quarter. It has proved its capacity for doing fairly well in a great variety of climate, but it is not the best breed for New England, the extreme Northwest, the thinly coated plains, nor any mountainous region. In the fertile lands of the Central West it and its crosses will long hold a leading position.

G. E. MORROW.

Careless Breeding.

The most successful breeders of fine cattle are the men who, starting upon a foundation of thoroughbred pedigreed stock, devote themselves to the care of their animals, without so much regard to innate purity of either sire or dam. To assume that having secured the purest of ancestors it must necessarily follow that equally good progeny will result without the very best of care, is entirely wrong, and this assumption is too often the cause of failure among breeders.

Another cause of failure is that breeders do not appreciate the absolute necessity of a thorough appreciation and knowledge of the capabilities of the stock they handle and desire to improve, and fail to properly study or understand the physiological application of these traits of animal character.

It is often assumed that having good stock it must follow as a matter of course that the progeny of such cattle will be equally good, and that all a breeder has to do is to calmly sit down and pocket the profit of what may be justly termed foolish indolence, or a failure to appreciate the capabilities of his stock.

Name and pedigree is taken as the no plus ultra of success, and after a few seasons of such treatment the herd begins to degenerate, the breeder falls to realize his dreams of prosperity, and the foundation of what might have been a fortune is referred at succession, and another failure is scored. To be imminently successful a beginner must pay the closest attention to the care and handling of his cattle, if he desires to produce results commensurate with his efforts, and this subject, especially among the breeders of Short-Horn stock, is one that must receive much more general attention if the lovers of that breed expect to retain the advanced position which they have occupied for so many years. There is no question but the reputation of the Short-Horn family has been maintained in a very large measure by English breeders, who have endeavored by study and the utmost attention to the way of care and shelter to bring out every point of excellence and keep up the reputations of the Bates, the Booths, and the Collings, whose ability as breeders is acknowledged the world over, a beautiful animal, whose pedigree traces back to some famous sire, known to possess the excellences of careful breeding and the best of care, will soon degenerate unless the practice of watchfulness is vigorously maintained, and American breeders will be compelled to pay more attention to this matter, and it is apparent that the most renowned breeders of American Short-Horns have awakened to a realization of this fact. Within the past three years there has been a very decided and perceptible lack of careful breeding, arising in a great measure from ignorance of what could be accomplished by studious endeavor, and the lovers of the Durham blood will be interested in knowing that at last there is a disposition to provide the most desirable food for animals, to shelter them properly, and in every other manner to insure the success, which without these requisits is utterly impossible.

The "Cow-Boy."

President Arthur, in his recent message, referred to the "cow-boys" of the Western frontier, inferring that they were a species of nomad, whose Ancis portion of lawlessness, and that the "cow-boys" of New Mexico, Texas, and Colorado were composed largely of men who gain a livelihood by driving great herds of cattle on the "range" and, in standing a stage-coach robbery or a railroad job the "cowboys" of the West has ever counted, but until the component has at once been taken that the "cow-boy" was the manufactor, and yet the truth would seem to be that this class of men have been traduced and vilified by the charges which have been laid at their door. It is natural to suppose that a man who can be hired to herd cattle at the meagre salary of $15 per month, and who is supposed to withstand the rigor of continual outdoor labor in its roughest phase, must of necessity be a person of very little ambition, and at the worst one whose only aim is to eke out an existence, which a man of ambition would not tolerate. They are generally a jolly, roystering set of young men, fond of excitement and adventure, who go into the business because it offers an opportunity for a living without the exercise of any great capacity, except that they are required to sit a horse well, know how to handle a lasso, and to ride hard and long. The many glowing accounts have, with which they have been charged, have in almost every instance been manufactured by men out of office, or who, if they ever did herd cattle, the tenderfoot, the dude, the tenderfoot, the person, or the man who, if he ever did herd cattle, would be found to be a very poor specimen of a cow-boy. It would seem that the cattle-thieves have had a champion in the person of the "cow-boy." Of course there have been exceptions to the rule, and some of the most daring robberies have been committed by the herders, but these have largely been the result of peculiar circumstances, to which the "cow-boy" is an entirely innocent party. The "cow-boy" is a very important factor in the business of the Western States, and he deserves a better fate than he receives at the hands of the public. He is, as a class, a good-hearted, generous, and, in his way, a very honest fellow, and, if he is given to a little boisterousness, it is the result of his surroundings, and he is not the worse for it

SORGHUM IN KANSAS.

The Past Season Unfavorable for the Growth of Native Sugar.

The Cane Suffered from Bad Weather and Attacks of the Chinch-Bugs.

Unabated Confidence in Future Success in the Production of Sugar.

Capital, Energy, and Science Are Enlisted Largely in the Work.

Acreage and Yield of Sorghum for 1881 and Preceding Years.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

TOPEKA, Kas., Dec. 23.—The experiments made this year in the matter of sorghum-growing and sugar-making were not as satisfactory as had been counted upon, in consequence of the great damage to the cane by chinch-bugs, and a generally unfavorable season. In some localities—chiefly in the eastern part of the State—the crop failed for the first time in fifteen years, and little more than an average yield was secured in the southern and southwestern parts of the State, where unusual care was exercised in cultivation. Although the acreage was some larger than in the year 1880, the product was found to be deficient in saccharine matter, and the presence of acids and other foreign substances prevented proper granulation. This condition was the direct result of the chinch-bugs, which stripped the cane, some fields being removed built for any use whatever.

No complaints are made except as to the quality of the cane grown this year, the universal testimony being that the crop is of Kansas, and that the yield was fully as large as was expected. But for the ravages of the pests it is believed that sugar-making this year would have attained such proportions in this State as would have astonished the world. As it is, the operations in this new field of industry are somewhat limited. Five large mills are running with fair success, however, and are making preparations for experiments on a much larger scale during the year 1882. The sugar-mills are located at Larned, Ellsworth, one between Great Bend and Pawnee Rock, and two at Sterling.

The Ellsworth Sugar-Works Company own 160 acres of land adjoining the city, upon which their main building, boiling-house, engine-room, and mill stand. A track leads from the main line of the Union Pacific Railroad to the door of the strup-room. The principal building is of wood, heavily timbered, sixty-four feet square and two and one-half stories high. The sugar-room, crushing-house, and boiling-house are built of brick, and form a part of the whole structure is of compact masonry, calculated to stand a pressure of 65,000 pounds—the weight of the crushing-rollers. The capacity of the mill is 5,000 gallons of strup per day, and it is provided with the newest and most improved machinery.

LARGE MILL AT STERLING.

The principal mill at Sterling was built this year by Mr. Sandys, an old sugar manufacturer of New Orleans. It is built of brick with stone foundation, 40x120, two stories high. At the time of its erection by Mr. Sandys, it was contracted with the farmers of Rice County for 160 acres of cane each year for a period of eight years, he agreeing to work up 160 tons of cane per day and manufacture all grades of sugar. The price paid for the cane delivered at the factory, was stipulated as follows: First year, unstripped, $1 to $1.25; stripped, $1.25 to $1.50; and for the subsequent years, unstripped, $1 to $1.75; stripped, $1 to $2.00. The mill is fitted up with machinery manufactured by Mr. W. C. Gemert, of Wisconsin, a well-known expert in sugar-making. The capacity of these two mills is about 500 tons of cane per day, although they never run to that extent, as a rule.

Mr. John Bennyworth has the pioneer mill, at Larned, which has been in successful operation for two years. An inferior quality of land, together with the burn, have retarded his work somewhat, but he is getting ready for the coming season, and is confident of the best results.

THE MILL NEAR GREAT BEND

has been the most successful this year, especially in the manufacture of strup, much of the cane being too much damaged for converting into sugar. The Great Bend mill, after working its share of the immediate neighborhood, had a surplus of 40,000 gallons of strup for this season. This is worth from 40 to 45 cents per gallon, and is being sent out in small quantities all over the country for local consumption. Some is being sent in gallon cans to the mining camps in Colorado and New Mexico, and meets with a ready sale at good prices. The Chicago dealers say they could handle this strup to excellent advantage if they could always depend upon getting it in sufficient quantities to justify them in making a market and creating a demand for the article.

On the whole, the year 1881 has not proved to be favorable to the sugar industry, but it can hardly be considered as a failure in the history of the State in this direction. Those who are interested in the work, and are directing the several enterprises mentioned above, find nothing in the experiences of the year to discourage them, and still insist that the western and central portions of the State are destined at no distant day to become

VAST SUGAR-PRODUCING REGIONS.

They have studied the question thoroughly and believe that the soil and climate of Kansas are rarely adapted to cane-growing. The long, dry, hot summer season, with its advantageous for perfecting the juices of the cane, and the level country, always free from mud or bad roads, permits of easy, regular handling from the fields to the mill. Well-understood value to both growers and manufacturers.

Prof. I. A. Hodges, of St. Louis, the author of several books upon this subject, made a visit to Kansas during the past summer for consultation and conversation with the great industry of cane-culture and sugar-making, and wrote as follows to the Kansas Farmer under date of July 1:

"I regard Kansas as the future great sugar State of the Union. The Northern Bureau and by those who read the proceedings of our last Mississippi Valley Cane-Growers' meeting at St. Louis that the Committee on Samples reported that of K. K. Stout, Esq., of Troy, Kas., as being of a color and strength from the method at the meeting, the first being from Texas made A. C. Boynton, from the early orange cane. Last season was the first of Mr. Stout's experience, and, although he has labored under many discouragements, his confidence is unshaken, as manifest by his works. He now has 100 acres or more of the best cane I have found. His workmen are in the field give his attention to the growing crop. He has contracted for his machinery, and will put a steam power mill and a bagasse burning fire brick of copper boilers that will work up two tons per day, producing about 350 to 500 gallons of strup. Should this granulate as well as last season it will give him 2,000 pounds of sugar and 300 gallons of molasses as a daily product. Mr. S. takes a business view of this enterprise, and intends to embrace the full economy of the enterprise by utilizing the offal of the cane—that is, the seed tufts, skimmings, and chips of his works. It will be remembered by those who have read my writings that I have strenuously urged this, and am now pleased to find a prospect of its thorough application. For the sake of others I will here repeat what I have so often written—viz.: That each acre of good cane will yield twenty-five bushels of seed, weighing fifty-eight pounds each. If the seed-tufts are collected at the mill and at the close of each day are passed through between the rolls not cloud, and then to crack the seed and then the whole cane is thrown into the tubs or vats that have been provided to receive the skimmings and chips, and there allowed to soak and cool over night, it will be found the most acceptable food for cattle, be offered stock of any kind. If this cake is fed full strength it has been found to fatten the hog. This, I judge, will be obviated by diluting some with the free washings of the apparatus each day, and more so by the addition of cut-hay, seed and chaff of the tuft. Then, again, a slight fermentation will take place by morning, that will not only aid digestion but create an appetite.

The propriety of such a system of working is self-evident, and will have to be adopted if we are to make this same crop add the sinews of the needs. A week of two zeres per day will cause 200 hogs and 100 head of cattle to consume the fifty bushels of seed and some 400 sacks of stock stop, and in doing so will increase at least one pound for each hog and two pounds on each head of cattle per day, producing when on each a sum sufficient to pay the running expense."

THE MARKET FOR STRUP AND SUGAR.

As a communication of recent date, Prof. Hodges answers a number of inquiries in regard to the market for strup and sugar in the Mississippi Valley. He regards it at present as a poor market for either selling or buying. The city is stocked with glucose compounds, and a strong prejudice against sorghum (of the past year) and manufacture has its effect upon the trade. Besides this, the New Orleans molasses is in the market, and, although regarded by them as inferior in sugar strength and favor of present stock of sorghum, still it is laughable to attempt to price in all city markets.

The next annual meeting of the Mississippi Valley Cane-Growers' Association is to be held at St. Louis Jan. 3, 1882, and from present indications will be one of unusual interest. The Louisiana State Planters' Association has already appointed fifteen delegates to the St. Louis meeting, and Kansas will also be represented.

RICE CORN.

Not so much attention is being devoted to the cultivation of rice corn. In 1880 the acreage of the State was 27,198, yielding 1,012,918 bushels, valued at $185,253.12. The total acreage for 1881 was 32,754, the yield 659,634, and the valuation $238,248.10. Among the twenty-eight counties Gove County had a very large yield. Butler, Clark, Decatur, and Rawlins Counties also yielded above the average, while in the remaining counties the harvest was a little below the average. Among the causes of injury mentioned are lack of good seed and the ravages of birds and chinch-bugs. Rice corn is valued on account of its ability to resist drouth, but the correspondents of the State Board of Agriculture generally do not consider it a profitable crop. It is raised now principally for stock-feeding purposes, but the farmers are learning from the experience of the past year that sorghum cane is much better for stock than rice corn. Cattle and sheep will eat the seed, the blades, and the stalks when cured, but feed of rice corn nothing is eaten but the seed. Nearly all the sheep in Southern Kansas are being fed this winter on sorghum cane. It is cut and cured the same as hay, and is very nutritious.

THE LAW OF BASTARDY.

The bastardy suit in which Augusta Wilmus and Charles Volksdorf appear respectively as complainant and defendant, and of which mention has been made heretofore, was brought to a close yesterday by Justice Arndt, who held Volksdorf to the Criminal Court in bonds of $800. The case is a peculiar one. Augusta, then a single woman, became the mother of an illegitimate child, and accused Volksdorf of its parentage. She then married Wilmus, who, after two weeks of experience with the child, objected to be called upon to support it. So the woman caused the infant's father arrest before Justice Meech and an examination was held: Volksdorf's liability was plainly established, but the Court dismissed the case upon the ground that the complainant was a married woman, and therefore could not be a party to a suit of this character. The case was resumed before Justice Arndt, and the authorities examined by the attorney for the prosecution and by the Court himself. The result of the trial which has excited deep interest among the German population was that the Justice based his opinion upon three cases cited in the English law, and upon one decision of the Supreme Court of the State of Vermont. He also claims that the intention of the framers of this State is that the public shall be relieved by the penalty prescribed in cases of bastardy of the support of those who have the misfortune to be the offspring of unmarried parents. The literal phraseology of the statute was that married women could not be parties to suits of that kind. That was proper enough on general principles, but in this case the child in question had been born unto Augusta while she was still an unmarried woman, and it was justice to require the father of the young one to support it.

For The Chicago Tribune.

The Sun may shine, and winds may blow,
And the Earth go whirling through space,
And Summers come and Summers go,
Like the smiles of a passionless face;
But the winds that rush from the fathomless sea
Will whisper of Love no more to me.

The Stars may shine, and the Moon wax old,
And the planets drift low in the West,
And the sibilant boat of the rocks grow cold
In the propitious season of love;
But the meaningless moan of the white-faced sea
Will echo of Love no more to me.

Huge ships may go down, and souls be lost,
And gaunt Famine laugh hollow and low,
And the cruel cry of the War-God crossed
Unshackle the demons of wo;
But from the throne of the King of the Sea
There cometh no answer of Love to me.

The Past is dead, and the Future dark,
And the Present is fretted with fear,
And the passionate song of the restless lark
Is unheard as I wait for her bier;
For Ina, my own, lieth dead in the sea,
And will whisper her love no more to me.

Strange Poaching Story.

London Daily News.

Poaching has frequently served to supply material for novelists, but rarely has fiction exceeded the strangeness of the true story told in the Sale Police Court on Monday. It appears that on the 6th inst. there were high doings at Lagh Park. A band of poachers had commenced operations when they were encountered by a posse of representatives of law and order led by the head gamekeeper. It appears to be the custom in the neighborhood of this great park for young gentlemen whose time hangs heavy on their hands to volunteer for a night's "spree" in hunting up the poachers. On this particular occasion there were two such volunteers—Mr. Charles Willesby Ricketts, who holds a position in the office of Col. Legh, and Mr. William Percival, the son of a neighboring farmer. Both these persons carried revolvers, which they were careful to charge to their fullest capacity, in the course of the encounter a shot was fired, and one of the poachers fatally wounded. The poachers, who were overpowered and captured, were placed on their trial charged with night-poaching and willful murder of their own comrade, to which end evidence was given by Ricketts, Percival, and the head gamekeeper, who severally swore that they had not carried firearms, nor, as far as they knew, were there firearms among their party. On Monday these three men, being recalled by the Magistrate, admitted their possession of firearms, and Percival confessed that he had fired at "a man at a distance of ten or a dozen yards," who appeared to be resting a gun to his shoulder and bring at the gamekeeper. The three men have been committed to trial on a charge of perjury and willful murder, and the course has been greatly to their disadvantage. The most hope, and a complete judicial investigation may put their conduct in another light. They are not the first victims of the maintenance of the Game laws of this period of English history; but their case is exceptionally dramatic and more than usually painful.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE.

The Fullerton Avenue Accident—A Plea for Justice.

To the Editor of The Chicago Tribune.

CHICAGO, Dec. 22.—In these days, when newspapers and the public try and settle all controversies before they come into the courts, it would be well, in consideration of the recent deplorable accident at the Fullerton avenue bridge, to bear a word in behalf of the engineer, who now lies in a critical condition at his home, a cripple for life even should he recover.

Bruce Wilcox has been in the employ of the Northwestern Road for thirty years—a careful, faithful, prudent man. Before public judgment is entered up against him, as guilty of carelessness, it is only fair to give him an opportunity to reach a condition where he can say a word for himself. It would be well also to remember that he is a courageous, upright man, who will not shirk any responsibility which may lie with him.

It will be found, however, as a matter of fact, that Mr. Wilcox slowed up and was stopping his train in compliance with the regulations and practice of the road, but that he was utterly deceived as to the distance he was from the bridge by the dense smoke and fog which enveloped all surrounding objects, so that he could not even see his smoke-stack before him. The rails were slippery from the rain, and made it additionally hard to stop the engine. Had he been going at any but the slowest speed, the momentum would have sent the whole train over, with such force as to crush engine, tender, and jay-car into one mass of indistinguishable ruin. A. Life-Insurance Suits.

To the Editor of The Chicago Tribune.

NEW YORK, Dec. 21.—Your special dispatch from Toledo notices under date Dec. 19 the cases in court now being carried under the auspices of the "Life Policyholders' Association of the United States," and is particular in stating all the facts as to the companies' side, even to the names of the legal gentlemen who conduct the cases for the companies; but, strangely enough, forgets to mention anything as to the other side—the side of the policyholders—more than to state the general basis of the claims and make a mistake as to their counsel, in saying that "several prominent local attorneys for certain policyholders" appeared in support of the claims. James T. Moore, a young man of great promise, and an indefatigable worker, appeared alone on the side of the association, being its attorney. Judge Pennywell and Judge Field, of Indianapolis, appeared for the companies, assisted by William Baker & Son and Haynes & Potter, local attorneys. Mr. Finch is Chairman of the commission appointed by the Legislature of the State of Ohio to prepare a bill for the draft of a law or bill to compel them and other companies to pay the values which are contended for in these cases, and receives his pay from the people, and is also the attorney for the New York Life in regard to the Ohio tax suit, which he pleed for in his report as the attorney of the people. These suits, or others, will be carried on successfully. These may fail by being prevented from coming to trial, as the intention is to keep them in court by all legal proceedings, and compel the commencing of new suits, thus worrying the managers and law officers of the "association" into silence. You will confer a favor on the members by giving a correct statement of the case. A. D. WILLIAMS.

President and Actuary.

The West Division Conductors and Drivers.

To the Editor of The Chicago Tribune.

CHICAGO, Dec. 21.—I understand that Mr. James K. Lake, Superintendent of the West Division City Railroad, has submitted to his Honor, Mayor Harrison, and through him to the patrons of the West Division Railroad, a proposition to the effect that in view of the near approach of Christmas his company would be willing, if it should meet with the general approval of the public(?) to charge 10 cents fare on the 22d inst. (no tickets), the whole amount to be divided between the conductors and drivers as a Christmas present. Now, while I as a driver am conscious of having tried to do my duty in such a manner as to merit the approval of the company and the passengers also, I do not feel that I for so doing deserve any special reward from our employers, nor do I care to be the recipient of their charity, while I appreciate and thank those who have agitated this subject for the feeling and good will which prompted them.

If the company think their conductors and drivers deserve anything of the kind would it not be better to set aside a day's receipts for the purpose mentioned, and give it to their men in the same manner that a bank or firm would present a clerk or employee, who has done duty without calling on the public for assistance?

If the business-men of Chicago who are philanthropically inclined wish to aid or benefit the conductors, the same cannot be done by a driver who is a worthy man with capacity to fill a higher and more responsible situation, think a while and see if after Jan. 1, 1882, there will not be a place in their store or office such a man could fill, with credit to himself and profit to his employers, and my word for it, gentlemen, there are many such in the employ of the West Division City Railroad as conductors and drivers. Very respectfully,

RAILROAD STREET DRIVER.

Legal Status of the Monday After a Christmas or New Year's Which Falls on Sunday.

To the Editor of The Chicago Tribune.

CHICAGO, Dec. 23.—It has been announced in some of the papers that Monday, Dec. 26, and Monday, Jan. 2, if they happen to be Christmas and New-Year's Day, are legal holidays. Are they such? If so, by what authority—National, or State, or both? If these days are legal holidays, then does it not follow that no business done on these days will be valid? If an election should by law be held on the first Monday in January, is Jan. 2 or Jan. 9 the first Monday, and would the same rule prevail in Ohio and other States that prevails here? There has been considerable discussion in these quarters among business friends, and it has been decided to appeal to THE TRIBUNE to settle the question. Please state in your paper your answers to the questions, and oblige, yours truly,

W. NONNIS.

[The Illinois Legislature, at its last session, amended the law in relation to negotiable instruments so as to provide that, where Christmas or New Year's came on a Sunday, the following Monday should be a legal holiday. It does not follow, however, that no business done on these days will be legal. The State has simply provided that they shall be holidays as far as banking-paper is concerned, and the Attorney-General has recently given an opinion to the effect that this law does not make Monday a legal holiday for any other purpose. The question before him was, whether school-teachers could be forced to work on a Monday where Christmas came on Sunday, and he decided that they could, since this act of the Legislature was simply an amendment to the law in relation to negotiable instruments, and, therefore, did not apply to the School law. Therefore, if his reasoning is right, if an election should by law be held on the first Monday of January, it ought to be held on that day.]

Washington Street Improvement.

To the Editor of The Chicago Tribune.

CHICAGO, Dec. 23.—Having recently visited the quarries near Waterloo, Wis., where the granit is being crushed for the top-dressing of Washington street, it has occurred to me that some facts in relation to the matter may be of general interest. The contract was made on the 15th of June last, and the entire work was to be completed by the 15th of November, 1881. The contractors are A. L. Amberg & Co. A. L. Amberg, James Kinkade, and John P. Dickey are the individual names. Their bondsmen are C. L. Nieboff and Patrick Lee. The contract requires in round numbers 10,000 cubic yards, to be measured in the completed work, at $4.50 per yard, which is thought to be a fair price. As is well known to the public, the work, instead of being completed, is only fairly begun, and it was to form some estimate of the reason of the delay and probable rate of progress in the future that it was deemed advisable to look to the sources of supply, etc. It would be reasonable to expect that the principals in so important a contract would have taken such measures as would have insured the completion of the work beyond a contingency, but, on the contrary, they sublet the work to D. Stephens, and without ever investing a dollar or taking a risk, sat down to see what would come of it, and are still, Micawber-like, waiting for something to turn up.

Mr. Stephens has a very commendable plant at the quarry. The crusher is one of Gates' largest, and would, in my judgment, even now do the work by the 1st of June next, if run to its full capacity. But Mr. Stephens does not seem to be in earnest, and the crusher is allowed to set out of order, and it is for this reason that there has been so much complaint in regard to the size of the stone. He is, moreover, making the work subordinate to other jobs, and, by so doing, blocks for other parties. Had Messrs. Amberg & Co. made the plant themselves, or if they could control and run it with energy, there might be, even at this late day, some show of their completing the work, but it must be confessed that the outlook is discouraging indeed. They have already defaulted on the contract for cross-walks, and it remains to be seen whether they will by some means infuse some of the quick and energy characteristic of Chicago men into their work, or ignominiously throw up the sponge. Their growing about measurement is simply a diversion to cover their shortcomings.

The Commissioners have already instituted what their action will be in the premises, and it cannot long be delayed. The street as far as completed meets the expectations of the Commissioners, and it is believed it will prove the best in the city, if not entirely so now.

FIDELITY SAVINGS BANK.

On the 11th of November Dr. Turpin, Receiver of the Fidelity Savings Bank, filed his annual report in the Superior Court, which was referred to Mr. Denison, Master in Chancery, for examination. Yesterday the Master filed his report approving the Receiver's accounts, and allowed $6,984.09 for legal expenses for the year, and the sum of $6,000 to the Receiver. He advises that the real estate and desperate debts be sold, and the estate closed as soon as possible, and the numerous creditors will cordially agree with him. He also vouchsafes the information that the legal expenses for the ensuing year will be much less than last year, and thinks when the present litigation is settled the estate can be settled. The report was ordered by Judge Gardner to be approved unless objections are filed in ten days. The Master in Chancery was allowed $200 for his services.

MRS. SWISSHELM.

She Tells All About That Wedding-Dress and Wedding—Also About the Bride and Groom.

To the Editor of The Chicago Tribune.

CHICAGO, Dec. 23.—The reports which have appeared of my daughter's wedding-dress prove that the reporters were nothing but men. The Miss Nancys must have been somewhere else; and these men have brought down on my head such a torrent of wonder and accusation that I must try to turn it aside. That I, who have been denouncing dress-trimming since about the time Col. Hubbard landed at Fort Desaxora, should have spent a summer trimming a dress is a little too bad, and I shall be buried under a mountain of indignation if I do not explain.

Trimming a dress "with the same material," the thing with which I am accused, means cutting that material into strings and scolops, making these into knife-plaitings, box-plaitings, flutings, kilt-plaitings, etc., etc., and sewing these fast to a dress so as to make it resemble a bale of waste paper or a basket of shavings. When one of these trimmed dresses is put upon a woman and she starts to walk, or rather to work her passage, across a room or through a street, ye gods of the heathen! ye Juno and Minerva! ye Venus and Aphrodite, are ye not glad ye are dead and done with the affairs of men? Tell us "there is nothing new under the sun" did you, old Father Solomon? Well, there may not have been in your day, but just you pay us a visit now and we will show a woman in that conglomeration of angles called a trimmed dress, and if you do not denounce the whole theory of inspiration it is queer.

If that does not throw you into epilepsy, old man, we will add to the dress one or more elongated narrow coat-tails, a polonaise with points, and a ball on every point; some long, loose ends and loops of anything that comes handy; a row of ball or bead fringe, with a basketful of all and sundries; then let you watch the wriggling, and jiggling, and twiggling; the quivering and shivering; the jumping and jerking; the flopping, and flinging, and fluttering; the fuss, and feathers, and flummery; the whole combination of incongruous motions; the embodiment of vulgar splutter, hurry, unrest, and tell you that the moving mass may represent a queen of society, and be adored as "lovely woman," and if you do not give up the "nothing new" theory you are as pig-headed as any professor in a theological college.

It is well for the old masters that they lived before modern women and men were invented, for if they had not posterity never would have heard of them. Raphael could not paint a Madonna without a model, and modern art is a failure through want of models, through the distortion of the artistic eye, the corruption of the artistic taste by their barbarous environments.

Think of putting into an allegorical picture or statue a nineteenth-century woman with her hour-glass chest, her bunioned feet, and every line of her face and form proclaiming displaced vital organs; proclaiming this so that every one of any sense reads the story at a glance! Who wants to perpetuate in marble the story of premature decay, disease, and early death which makes up the history of the women of this century?

But I have protested so long and with so little result against false standards of taste that it occured to me years ago to try to do something toward furnishing a true; so, lastspring, when I learned that my only child would want a wedding dress, the time had come. I went back to Swissville alone, and took rooms with our tenant, a German farmer, knowing that there I could live with Nature, free from suggestions or dictations of malformed tastes; and there I evolved that wedding dress and the giant trees I had planted and the lullaby of waters to whose music I had slept every night for years.

I worked the dress skirt in two separate pieces in a quilting-frame, joining them and uniting the design after taking it out. It is of cream-white silk on a lining of Lawndale muslin with wool wadding, and combines the effects of quilting and embroidery. I had no settled design or pattern when I began, but gradually thought out and put in such things as occurred to me. Around the bottom are five water-lilies on their "pads" or green leaves, one of such size that a much lily, with its leaves, covers a breadth of silk of about twelve inches. This part of the design I took from a "picture on memory's wall," hung there in '57 during a visit to Eagle-Nest Lakes, in Sherburne County, Minnesota. In an old Harper's Monthly I found among the illustrations of "Spring" a picture about three inches square of a stalk of swamp-mallow and one of "Pussy-cat willow." I had never seen either growing, but a friend who had told me of their size and appearance. Above the lilies, and as if growing up from behind them, I made stalks of these appropriate plants, running them quite up to the waist, representing the mallows by thorn work, the willow heads by satin stitch, the stalks by thorns. I made a row of tiger lilies up the front, graduating in size, then filled up with tent-like forms of various heights, representing the cones, tulips, morning-glories, and other beautiful things growing around me. I would go out, select something, put it in a good light, and proceed to take its portrait with my needle. I am sorry I have broken my model from its stem, and wishing I might replace it, for I do not like cut flowers; prefer they should all die at home.

The embroidery can be done in any color, or in many colors, and the doing educates and developes both brain

THE COUNCIL.

By a Close Vote the Fish-Inspection Ordinance is Maintained.

The Demagogs Still Manage to Render the Fire Ordinance Worthless.

A Sitting-Down on the Preposterous Demands of the American Cable Company.

The Amended Ordinance for the Use of the Mutual Union Telegraph Company.

The Council held an adjourned meeting last evening, Ald. Culleton in the chair, and all the members present except Shorey, Alpeter, Young, and Mayor Harrison.

Ald. Sanders presented an order directing the City Engineer to send in an estimate of the cost of lowering the grades on the approaches to the river tunnels by extending them a block in each direction.

It was referred to the Committee on Harbor and Bridges.

The Committee on Streets and Alleys, South Division, recommended the passage of an order requiring the Department of Public Works, as follows:

That on all streets hereafter improved the catch-basins for the sewers be placed at or toward the middle of the block, and that the summits of the streets be at the intersection; and, where the catch-basins are already in, that a special tax be levied for removing the same, and added to the amount for improving the streets.

After some talk, in which the necessity for such an improvement was conceded by several Aldermen, the report was laid over in order to get "more light."

The Committee on Fire and Water recommended that S. S. Appleby be allowed to pile and save lumber on three lots on Morgan street, between Lake and Randolph.

Ald. Barrett moved that the report be placed on file.

Ald. Hildreth supported the motion, as the locality was surrounded by frame buildings.

Ald. Everett wanted the report concurred in, since the property-owners did not object, and it was for the interest of Appleby to establish a lumber-yard.

The motion to file was agreed to—yeas, 19; nays, 14—as follows:

YEAS—Sanders, Dixon, Sanders, Appleton, Burke, Sheridan, Culleton, Hildreth, Riordan, Smyth, Feeney, Schroeder, Nelson, Stauber, Murphy, Meier (Sixteenth), Barrett, Burley, and Blair.

NAYS—Phelps, Watkins, Wetherell, Lawler, Bond, Dean, Hulbert, Everett, Brady, Wagner, Hirsch, Meyer (Fifteenth), Murphy.

THE COMMITTEE ON LICENSES

recommended the repeal of the ordinance in relation to the appointment of a Fish-Inspector.

A motion to place on file was lost—yeas, 15; nays, 18; as follows:

YEAS—Sanders, Dixon, Sanders, Phelps, Watkins, Wetherell, Smyth, Nelson, Bond, Dean, Hulbert, Everett, Brady, Wagner, Burley, and Blair.

NAYS—Appleton, Burke, Sheridan, Culleton, Hildreth, Riordan, Lawler, Purcell, Feeney, Schroeder, Stauber, Hirsch, Meyer (Fifteenth), Meier (Sixteenth), Murphy, and Barrett.

THE BRIDGE ORDINANCE.

The Committee on Harbors and Bridges recommended the amendment of the bridge ordinance so as to have the ten-minute rule apply between 7 o'clock in the morning and 11 o'clock at night.

Ald. Lawler asked that the report be laid over.

Ald. Sanders moved to recommit.

Ald. Smith said, while the people had rights, the ordinance was a direct slap at one of the great commercial interests of the city, and he was opposed to sending it back to the committee.

Ald. Burley said he had several amendments which he wished to offer. One retained the present hour and a half hour at night, another made the ten-minute rule to 9 p. m., and a third exempted bridges under which tugs could not pass.

The report and amendments were finally recommitted in order that a proper ordinance might be prepared.

MILWAUKEE & ST. PAUL.

The Committee on Streets and Alleys, North Division, recommended the passage of an ordinance granting Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad the right of way on Dunlap street—was taken up.

As the ordinance was defective in some respects, in thus being no provisions as to viaducts, keeping the street in repair, etc., it was sent back to the committee.

THE BUILDING ORDINANCE.

The Committee on Fire and Water recommended the passage of the following:

Be it ordained, etc., That Sec. 1,149 of Ch. 38, Ch. 16 of the Municipal Code, is hereby amended, the following shall hereafter be Sec. 1,149 of said article, adopted in place and stead of said Sec. 1,149 repealed, viz.:

Sec. 1,149—Shall violate any of the provisions of this article or commit any offense hereunder, where no other penalty is provided, shall be subject to a fine of not less than $10 nor exceeding $100 for each and every such offense or violation, and a further fine or penalty of $10 for each and every day thereafter such offense or violation continues. Any builder or contractor who shall construct, and any architect who shall prepare or furnish plans and specifications for any building in violation of this article, shall be liable to the penalties provided and imposed by this section.

Sec. 2. The ordinance shall be in force from and after its passage.

The Committee on Schools recommended the sale to James Mair, at $60 a foot, on Archer avenue, south of the Archer avenue school lot, corner of Fullerton, half cash and the balance in one, two, and three years, at 6 per cent interest.

A motion was made to reconsider in order to take up the report again.

The motion to reconsider prevailed, and the report went into the pigeon-hole again.

The Committee on Fire and Water reported that they could see no necessity for the passage of the ordinance concerning the manner of laying underground cables, and therefore recommended that it be placed on file. Concurred in.

AMERICAN CABLE COMPANY.

The Committee on Fire and Water, to whom was referred the petition of the American Cable Company, reported it back, together with the following opinion of the Law Department, in which the Committee concurred:

Ald. A. Hurst, Chairman, etc.: A petition of the American Cable Company has been referred to your committee by the Department for the purpose of having a proper ordinance drafted. After thinking the matter over, I have come to the conclusion that it is impossible to comply with the request, for the reason that any ordinance purporting to grant the privilege asked for by the American Cable Company would be manifestly improper. The company, after promising that it is the intention to use underground electric conductors, etc., modestly prays that the Council will grant that a proper ordinance be drawn and presented to the Council granting unto your petitioner the authority to lay said conductors in the streets and alleys of said city in such manner as may be prescribed in such ordinance. This desired reserve privilege would be very valuable to the American Cable Company, for the reason that it would enable the City of Chicago would derive from it not one penny. If this company is, as stated, a responsible company, and not at all experimental in the matter of transporting, it will not be the conductors for its own use, but only for the purpose of leasing the same, and, of course, the business of transporting; and I shall have a contract with any responsible person who may be willing to lease such conductors. A contract with such person would be entirely in the discretion of the City Council, and would enable the City of Chicago to make a good bargain for the use of the conductors. A contract with such person would also enable the City of Chicago to make a good bargain for the use of the conductors, inasmuch as the City of Chicago would be in a position to make or not make a contract with any person, private drains, etc., that may be desired to be laid in said conductors, and would be in a position to make a good bargain for the use of the conductors. Respectfully, A. A. Hurst, Corporation Counsel.

Ald. Hildreth moved that the report be placed on file.

Ald. Sanders moved that the report be referred back to the committee, with instructions to report back an ordinance granting the privilege asked for by the American Cable Company.

Ald. Burley said the report was in effect a refusal to grant the privilege, and he was opposed to it.

Ald. Everett wanted the report concurred in, since the property-owners did not object, and it was for the interest of Appleby to establish a lumber-yard.

The motion to file was agreed to—yeas, 19; nays, 14—as follows:

YEAS—Sanders, Dixon, Sanders, Appleton, Burke, Sheridan, Culleton, Hildreth, Riordan, Smyth, Feeney, Schroeder, Nelson, Stauber, Murphy, Meier (Sixteenth), Barrett, Burley, and Blair.

NAYS—Phelps, Watkins, Wetherell, Lawler, Bond, Dean, Hulbert, Everett, Brady, Wagner, Hirsch, Meyer (Fifteenth), Murphy.

THE COMMITTEE ON LICENSES

recommended the repeal of the ordinance in relation to the appointment of a Fish-Inspector.

A motion to place on file was lost—yeas, 15; nays, 18; as follows:

FINANCIAL.

Stocks were active, unsettled, and weak in the early hours. Towards the close there was an upward reaction, attributed to purchases by the bears to cover shorts and to manipulation for a rise as a basis for further sales. Transactions were large. Chicago commission houses report the change very agreeable as contrasted with the dead stagnation of the last few weeks. In a general way, it may be accurately said that the transactions of Chicago brokers cover more sales than purchases by one-half. There was some investment buying, and little speculative buying for a rise, but these were faint ripples against the downward stream. The almost universal expectation seems to be in both Chicago and New York that still lower prices will be made. No upturn can be expected till all the weak speculators on the long side have been weeded out, and all the inflated stocks have been reduced to their proper quotations. Except by the suffering speculators on adhil margins, the present shrinkage in prices is regarded as a fortunate occurrence. Long-headed speculators on the bull side declare that such a movement at this time is indispensable to the success of a future bull movement. Prices were too high for buyers. There is a vast amount of money seeking investment. The prosperity of the country is unmistakable, and there is every prospect for a very heavy business on the railroads next year. Financially, there does not seem to be a cloud in the sky. From the turn given the market yesterday it is evident that the leaders do not intend to permit a panic, if they can prevent it. They will put stocks down to the lowest point possible without actual collapse. Under these circumstances the limit to the decline will be the point at which outside money will come into Wall street to buy the good stocks that are going at a sacrifice. In good times this supporting power is always latent in the market. When it is aroused the liquidation will be over and the manipulators will find that they have hammered the market solid. At what point the present decline will reach that level of hardpan no one, not even Gould himself, can tell. But present appearances indicate strongly that this hard pan has not yet been struck.

Stocks did not suffer as much as might have been expected from the damaging statements made by the Vanderbilt roads. Insiders had, as usual, discounted the bad news in advance. New York Central is shown to have earned $9,700,000 less than the previous year. The surplus of Lake Shore, which shows earnings of 8 8-10 per cent, ends the year with a surplus of $16,000, against $1,600,000 last year. Michigan Central's gross receipts were the same as last year, but its operating expenses were $1,000,000 more, and it has only $80,000 left after paying its fixed charges and the dividend of 2½ per cent disbursed in the first six months of the year. Canada Southern earned only enough to pay its expenses and the interest on its bonds. Had it not been for the railroad war these statements would have been quite different.

Michigan Central, Central Pacific, and Union Pacific are marked for a savage decline, so says Wall street.

Mr. Villard was reported to be doing nothing to sustain his stocks beyond taking good care of his own holdings.

Money was at one time reported at a premium of 1-64 of 1 per cent, but the stringency did not play an important part in the day's operations.

The New York Tribune of Thursday stated that there had "been a large liquidation of the 'bear' account. But there is reason to believe that the liquidation of the 'bull' account has hardly begun. The outside holders of stocks do not yet appreciate the difference which the annual reports of railroad companies inevitably must show between an increase in gross earnings and that of net earnings."

Recent reductions of rates on foreign exchange is referred to in New York as the best answer possible to the reports of an impending panic in London. Undoubtedly American railroad stocks of the speculative variety have been weak in London, as have, but the talk about a general panic there in American securities has been unfounded; United States bonds were never stronger there.

According to the Herald it is beginning to be realized that there is a mass of worthless truck upon the market; that too many railroads are being built for the simple aggrandisement of construction companies; and that the legitimate demands of commercial enterprises are making heavy drafts upon loanable funds.

The Graphic asserts that the deliveries of stocks to brokers' offices in the street were more so bad and irregular as at present, and it is no uncommon thing to have stocks fail of delivery for two days. This is a remarkable circumstance, considering that money is so stringent, and it shows that the market is largely oversold. All of which may be a blind to delude the street into the belief that the bears have been overselling.

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, Dec. 23.—Merchants generally report business largely of a holiday character. Merchandise is in moderate demand, and while some lines of trade are comparatively active, in others there is but little animation and light sales. No great activity is anticipated until the spring trade fairly sets in.

The dry goods trade generally is very quiet, the holiday trade, which has been keeping the jobbers busy, having dropped off. Prices are well upheld.

The tendency of the grain market has been downward. Wheat declined 3 cents this week and corn 1½ cents, and prices fluctuated within those ranges, the market closing steady with a slight exhibition of firmness.

Last week, and part of this week, the decline was precipitated by the failure of a leading grain house. Prices somewhat recovered, and the market closes firm at an advance.

In cotton the market has been quiet and generally steady with the volume of business small, closing weak.

In wool buying has been very moderate, buyers having confidence in the future, and being firm as to prices. No features of special interest.

Petroleum is dull and unsatisfactory.

In freights a fair amount of business is doing. The market is steady.

In pig-iron a fair business has been done, and for better grades higher prices have been obtained. Scotch pig-iron has not sold largely, but prices are firm. The tendency to advance prices may create a speculative movement, but it is generally conceded there seems to be no failing off in the demand, which has for a long time been very active. Prices are well sustained.

The leather trade was generally very quiet. A fair demand is anticipated soon. Dealers are not disposed to make much concession in prices, the trade in leather trade is slack. Nothing of interest occurred during the week.

There was a material change in the lumber trade.

The produce trade is dull, and prices are nominal, but there is a large amount of both butter and cheese in storage, which will not be in the hands of strong firms who can stand the storage. There is no notable anticipated change.

Wool sees a little more move. There has been a fair business in some lines. Opinion shows a tendency to advance, and there seems to be a feeling that the worst of the depression in the line of business is over.

Raw sugar is dull and unchanged. Refiners are very cautious, holders are firm, and prices are very nominal.

At a sale of 2,000 half-chests of green tea Thursday the bidding was not animated, and an average decline of one cent per pound was sustained. The opposite direction was shown in the coffee trade there are no special features to note. The new crop is coming in fairly. The payment is estimated at least as large as last year. Large operations are hanging out of the market, and are somewhat speculative at the outlook.

The failures the last seven days throughout the country were 177, which was a very large number, and a very large part of the failures in the Southern States still furnish the largest quota, disasters in that section numbering 30, in the Eastern States, 24; Western, 45; Middle States, 9; Pacific, 9, and New York City, 30.

The following are the quotations of the principal items of grain and provisions, were as follows during the week ended Friday: Flour, receipts, 105,191 barrels; exports, 33,716 barrels. Wheat, receipts, 24,000 sacks; sales, 2,812,000 bushels. Wheat, receipts, 22,000 bushels; exports, nearly 347,507 bushels; sales, 1,104,000 bushels for prompt, 14,127,000 bushels for future delivery. Corn, receipts, 273,515 bushels; exports, about 102,000; sales, 1,069,000 bushels, and 3,796,000 for future delivery. Oats, receipts, 450,773 bushels; exports, 1,782; sales, 1,275,000 bushels. Pork, receipts, 1,000 barrels; exports, almost 2,935 barrels; total sales, 15,000 barrels, including old and new mess. Lard, receipts, 13,238 tierces, 5,121 kegs, 1,186 tubs, 80 barrels; exports, about 3,663,180 pounds; sales, 9,000 tierces for prompt, and 231,111 tierces for future delivery; sales included city and Western steam; also No. 1 city and refined.

BOSTON.

BOSTON, Dec. 23.—The following will appear in the special market reports of the Commercial Bulletin to-morrow:

Sales of wool in Boston this week reached the large total of 4,358,124 pounds domestic and 1,000,000 foreign. Prices are very firm, dealers reaching for an advance of 10@15 cents per pound for fine wools.

Pig-iron is unusually active. Prices of American iron now give promise of an advance in some instances. No. 1 X is held at a rise of $1 per ton. Demand continued to tend upward, and 50@75 cents is asked.

There is no change in lumber and building materials.

Leather is quiet and easy. Shipments of boots and shoes from Boston to points outside of New England, 22,313 cases, against 24,130 cases last year. Rubber boots and arctics are quiet, but prices are firm. Cows are scarce, and jobbers are selling at $3.50 per pair net. Hides are quiet and easy. Sole leather was called cowhides, 9 cents.

Wool is very quiet. The cotton market is dull and easier.

Dairy products are in steady demand, and generally strong. The loss of creamery butter is felt more.

Potatoes are scarce and high. Apples have sold at 25 cents per barrel; round lots of choice, $3@3.50 per barrel.

Poultry and eggs are quiet. Granulated sugar is unchanged and in light demand.

Pork dropped this week, and is in fair demand.

CINCINNATI.

CINCINNATI, O., Dec. 23.—The failure during the week of the prominent old house of J. E. Warren & Co. has had a tendency to bring many into the disposal of credit, and has had a general conservative tendency among the trade in this vicinity. The demand for money has not been urgent, but rates are very firmly maintained, there being more transactions at 7 than at 6 per cent, which are the prevailing figures.

The money markets remain steady, and even strong, without indication of a surplus stock.

Lard tobacco has been firm, with a good demand. Prices of a better grade are well sustained.

In flour and grain the early part of the week ruled a dull business. There has been a revival with respect to wheat, corn, and rye, but oats, corn, and barley continue dull.

In provisions there has been a decided improvement in demand yesterday, but did not hold it today. Hogs show firmer, but the receipts are very much curtailed, and business is very limited.

In the hardware trade there have been large sales, and business is very active.

BALTIMORE.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 23.—The markets the past week have ruled very dull. But little was done in grain, provisions, and Virginia consumptive tobacco.

Flour ruled very dull, and the receipts have been very small. Wheat ruled very dull, and the receipts have been very small, and there was no demand for export, and prices have ruled lower. Corn ruled very dull, and the receipts have been very small, and there was no demand for export, and prices have ruled lower.

Provisions ruled very dull. Today the market closed with more firmness.

As is usual at this season of the year, the quality of beef cattle is ordinary generally, and the market slow at quotations of last week. Hogs are plenty at the quotations of last week, but warm weather checked transactions. Sheep are plenty, but mostly of ordinary quality, and in light demand. Prices are nominal.

PITTSBURG.

PITTSBURG, Pa., Dec. 23.—There has been an active market in pig-iron the past week, with prices strong and good goods selling at an advance of from 50 cents to $1 per ton. The consumption and demand continues heavy, and, as stocks of pig and ore are low, still higher prices are not improbable. There is also a light stock of bar iron and nails, with a brisk demand and firm rates. Rumors of an intended advance in the iron card to 3 cents at the next meeting of the Western Iron Association have been circulating freely the past few days, but manufacturers say that, while the demand would sustain an advance, they are not anxious to change the rate, as it might unsettle the market and cause a reaction. All other branches of trade, excepting holiday goods, have been quiet and little doing.

Glass is moving along slowly at unchanged prices.

Petroleum was steady, the highest price bid for United certificates being 94¾ cents and the lowest 92¾ cents. This afternoon the closing figure was 93¾ cents. Sales and resales, 2,267,000 barrels; shipments, 373,080 barrels.

The coal trade is quiet. Shipments since last report, 2,150,000 bushels to Cincinnati and Louisville.

Arrivals of live stock were very large, and the market rather dull in consequence. Cattle receipts, 4,000 head through and 2,000 local; against 3,382 head through and 2,261 local last week. Common to prime sold at $3.50@6.50. Hogs, receipts, 27,570 head, an increase of 11,000 head over the week before. Philadelphias quoted at $6.20 to $6.40. Sheep receipts, 9,350, or 1,400 head more than last report. Selling at $3.60 to $5.40 for common to extra.

ST. LOUIS.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Dec. 23.—Trade for the past week has been quiet, but fair in volume and steady in prices. Nothing of special note occurred. There was a good demand for money, and rates remained firm at 8 per cent. New York exchange was in light demand, and passed between banks at $1 discount.

The jobbing trade in all branches except woolen goods, sales of which were restricted by warm weather, has been fair, orders being fully up to the average and prices generally steady.

On Change wheat fluctuated, and declined about 2 cents from the highest point, rebounded slightly at the close, and a firmer feeling prevailed, but tradings were small. Corn was steadier and closed a shade higher.

Provisions declined in sympathy with other markets, and the first week speculative feeling of the season showed itself. Considerable dealing was done in future pork, and quite a number of round lots of cash lard changed hands. Meats were dull and lower, and offered up at the close, and were salable at an advance from the lowest point of the week.

Hogs were higher at the close, and the supply was not equal to the demand.

PHILADELPHIA.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 23.—The North American tomorrow will say:

Business was generally dull during the past week, and prices of several leading articles unsettled. In cotton there was no essential change to notice.

The demand for flour continues limited, both for export and home consumption, at the almost total exclusion of others. The Gewandhaus has, on the contrary, presented the greatest variety of works and authors; of these last no less than 60, among them forty-two whose names are familiar to every friend of Bach's works, sixty-five of greater or lesser note have been performed; Beethoven is represented by 108; Mendelssohn by 105; Schumann by 114; Reinecke by sixty-two, etc., etc. The composition of the first Gewandhaus concert is practically unknown, and even the names of the composers are now scarcely mentioned. Haydn is the first great name met with on the old program, a symphony by him having been performed at the 13th, in the third Gewandhaus concert. Mozart appears for the first time in January, 1782, as author of a "Sinfonie, von Wolfgang Mozart." (Mozart the younger, to distinguish him from his father, Leopold Mozart, who is chiefly known in connection through his "Musical Sleighride," with kettledrums, trumpets, oboes; five sets of sleigh-bells, and four persons with couriers' whips; particularly in the Andante, "as the musical critic, Rochlitz, remarked in an article on this, which "represents a lady trembling with the cold"); and for the second time in 1786, after which date he rose gradually but surely to his later commanding position. To Miss Schiott, a pupil of Clementi, who afterwards became Countess Thomaschoff, belongs the honor of having been the first to introduce Beethoven to the Gewandhaus audience, in the aria "Ah, perfido," on Michaelmas-Day, 1796. Beethoven appears in 1801, as the composer of a "Septet for wind instruments," produced, according to the reviewers of the period, a great effect, although the work has been since pronounced spurious. At the head of the program for the 13th of November, 1801, stands the following: "Symphony by Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, in Berlin (for the first time, MS.)." This was probably the Symphony, op. 11, which was published shortly thereafter, and which, although it has since been again been given in the Gewandhaus. The attention of those interested in Gewandhaus statistics may be directed to a new work by Alfred Dörffel: "Festschrift zum 100-jährigen Jubeläum der Einwohnung des Gewandhaus-Concert Saales," published under the auspices of the directors. It can be had of Fr. Kistner or of any dealer in music in Leipzig. With Schumann the Gewandhaus concerts may be said to have reached their highest point, after the termination of the cultivation of the modern school of music. The existence of Wagner, Liszt, Rubinstein, Berlioz, and others, is, to be sure, not quite ignored; but these masters, whose influence on the present and future development of musical culture is simply incalculable, can scarcely feel flattered by the amount of attention bestowed upon them. This fact is often made the ground of complaint against the committee of the directors. On the other hand, every true lover of music must rejoice that, in the midst of much change and of real and imaginary progress on all sides, at least one institution devotes itself to the performance of those works which, in the course of the last half-century, have come to be regarded as classical, and an acquaintance with which, in their purity, is indispensable to every educated musician. To-day, the Gewandhaus concerts stand almost alone; now, however, no longer as an experiment, but as a tried and trusted supporter of the best in art.

At the inauguration of the hall a reviewer wrote:

"I was much rejoiced to hear that the new concert hall, the building of which has cost several thousand thalers, was to be inaugurated. Perhaps no certain place in all Germany can show such a hall. More than 500 persons were present, and there was, nevertheless, room for many more. The frescoes on the ceiling are by Oeser, and, according to connoisseurs, are masterpieces. The music makes a wonderful effect in this high and tasteful hall. Herr Berger played a violin concerto with great applause, and one could hear the softest and faintest tones in the most distant corners. . . . Over the orchestra, in the midst of which stands an organ for use in sacred concerts, are two boxes, one for the drummer, the other for the trumpeter; by this arrangement some room is saved in the orchestra; but when the chorus is no fuller than today, the drums and trumpet are much too loud, and unpleasant in the ear."

Now, after the old hall has done duty for a century, it is, in its turn, to be supplanted by a new one. The site for the latter, on the left bank of the Pleisse, between Schimmelstreich and the old Rosental Garden, is definitely fixed upon; the City Council lends funds to the extent of 450,000 marks, and the work will undoubtedly be begun in the spring of 1882. May the next hundred years be as productive of pleasure and benefit to all concerned as the century now so happily brought to a close!

MERIDIAN (Miss.) Correspondence Picayune, Dec. 19.—On Thursday the interesting ceremony of unveiling the monument which had been erected to the memory of the Confederate dead of Jackson County took place. Col. James E. McMillan delivered a brief but chaste and appropriate oration, at the conclusion of which the unveiling of the monument was successfully accomplished. Messrs. H. D. King and F. R. Carter had charge of this part of the program in charge. On the north side of the monument, under two crossed swords, is the inscription, from the pen of the "poet priest," Father Ryan:

"We care not whence they came,
Dear in their dreams of fame,
Whether unknown or known to fame,
Their cause and country still the same:
They died—and were the gray."

Present side bears the figure of a horseman, and below the inscription:

On the south side, under a stack of arms, are these lines:

THE SOUTH.

Information Gleaned During a Visit to Atlanta.

Unfriendly Feeling of the Whites Towards the Negroes.

A Democrat Who Wants Bourbon Domination Overthrown.

The Spot Where Gen. McPherson Fell—Traffic in War-Relics.

Special Correspondence of The Chicago Tribune.

ATLANTA, Ga., Dec. 19.—Atlanta afforded me most excellent opportunities to obtain a view of the South as a whole. It contains representatives nearly all the white now of about every Southern State. In and about Atlanta I talked with a large number of people of all classes, from the common colored farm-hand to the prominent business and professional man. The information which was thus obtained was much more satisfactory, and gave me a much more accurate idea of the condition and needs of the country, than I was able to obtain in any other way. Of course, the testimony of these witnesses was conflicting to a certain extent, and was evidently colored in certain instances by the prejudices and predilections of those who spoke; but, by classifying and discriminating, I imagined I was able to form a pretty fair idea of the subject under consideration.

ONE OF THE BEST-INFORMED MEN

I met in the South is on the police-force in Atlanta. He is a native Georgian, and resided upon a farm in the country until the last few years. He took me about the city, pointing out the low-down resorts both for whites and blacks, and discussed the subject of the past and present of the State of Georgia with as much philosophy as any man I met. He is, like all Southerners, decidedly prejudiced against the negro, and speaks as though his inferiority was a thing to be taken without question. It was evident here, as elsewhere, that a colored man is much more likely to be arrested for trivial offenses than a white man. It is only necessary to imagine that a colored man is going to do something wrong, and he is immediately put under arrest. The filth and squalor in which many of the Atlanta negroes live are beyond discription. We found one family in a little room in a basement that appeared very damp and uncomfortable. My friend, the policeman, rapped at the door.

"Who's dar?" came from within.

"Policeman. Open the door."

That word was talismanic. The door was immediately unbolted. The interior of the room was

NOT MORE THAN TEN BY TWELVE FEET.

Within that space all the operations of keeping house were performed. A stove, a bed, an old chair or two, some stools, a cupboard, and a few smaller articles, composed the furniture. The inmates were a middle-aged mulattoe colored man, and a woman evidently considerably younger. They were sitting, without a light, before the small fire in the stove. The policeman had told me that this was one of the bad characters of the city, before we reached his habitation. After the door was opened the following conversation took place:

"What woman is that?" by the policeman.

"She is one who has been doing some washing for me from the neighborhood."

"O she is, say? What reat do you pay here?"

"Two dollars a month."

"Have you seen Joe Williams lately."

"He—he ain't been yer for some days. Reckon he's skippin out."

The description given above will answer in the main for several places that we visited. The officer said that he was expected every night to make three rounds, and keep a very close watch upon the portion of town. The policeman discoursed as follows:

"The negro is

in this State. I have sometimes thought that perhaps it was the pay we were getting for having held him in bondage; but, at any rate, he is no less a curse. I tell you what I think of it that!"

"Well, in the first place, as things now are, the colored man is about the only help our farmers can get, and he is most uncertain. He insists on having Saturday as a holiday. This is one of his tested points. He will go to his employer and say, 'I want to get my wages today.' Perhaps it has rained all the week, and you are very anxious to get your cotton-picking along on Saturday. It makes no difference to nigger. You can't hold a single nigger. They all drop everything just where it was on Friday night, and leave you to mourn your loss. Then the constant strife of the negroes to get up to your place and get your cotton picked, for it only for a dollar or so, he will leave you every time. He is in no danger from doing this, for he can easily hire out to some one else. But, if he should lose a week, he would leave you if it cost him a prosecution, plaintiff's fee, and a dollar or two. Then the greatest curse lies in the fact that the negroes all desire to live in the towns. Here there is not near so much demand for their services as in the country, in the country there is hard work, and almost everything, and at almost any price, so they can be in town. The result of this is, we have a very large stock of poor whites at starvation's door all the time, and not averse to resorting to any kind of villainy to keep the country from them. That is why you see them living in such places as I showed you tonight. Many of these men are really very expert villains. They do all kinds of crime, and are often hard to detect."

"WHAT IS LAND WORTH

in the vicinity of Atlanta?"

"Some $25 and as high as $75."

I looked astonished.

"Yes—there is some of it that they ask $25 per acre for, and I have known some to sell for nearly that."

"I am not looking astonished because the price was high; I considered it extremely low."

"O that is it! Well, that is about the price here. Sherman's march to the sea hurt this State terribly. We are not recovered from it yet, by any means, and will not be for many years to come. We don't pick up as people in a Northern State would do. We don't know how. And then, besides, there has been a complete upheaval of our society. Those who were rich before, or wealthy before the War, and who, in case slavery had continued, would never have had to take a single thought in regard to their future, are today the poorest of any we have. Young men of middle class, or, in certain instances, of the very poor class, are today owning land. They have found the former rich man or his sons in distress for ready money, and have purchased his land lot by lot, until he has nothing left. The price of this land has been eaten up. The knowledge of any business or profession has been studiously neglected, and there is nothing but poverty to look forward to."

"How is your soil here?"

"Well, it is pretty poor. It will raise cotton, any of it; but cotton is largely a sun-plant, and the other for the trumpeter; by this arrangement some room is saved in the orchestra; but when the chorus is no fuller than today, the drums and trumpet are much too loud, and unpleasant in the ear."

Now, after the old hall has done duty for a century, it is, in its turn, to be supplanted by a new one. A MUSICAL CENTENNIAL.

The One Hundredth Anniversary of the Gewandhaus in Leipzig—Interesting Reminiscences—The Old School and the New.

Correspondence New York Evening Post.

LEIPZIG, Nov. 27.—The seventh Gewandhaus concert for this season was given on Friday, Nov. 25 (this being the 100th anniversary of the inauguration of the Gewandhaus Concert-Hall in Leipzig), and was in every way worthy of the event it commemorated.

The concert was opened by an overture by Capellmeister Rietzschke, with the motto, well known to all frequenters of the Gewandhaus, "Hes severa est verum gaudium." A soft and dreamy introduction, followed by the actual overture in strict style, awakened a responsive chord in the breasts of the audience, as the hearty and long-continued applause testified. Following the overture, a prolog, written by Rudolph Von Gottschall, was spoken by Frau Hildebrand von der Osten. The poem told of the artistic triumphs and well-deserved success of the institution, and of the great names which had appeared on its programs, and closed with a prayer for the well-being of the present and future directors and members. The remainder of the program was arranged in chronological order, as follows:

G-major symphony (No. 13 of the Breitkopf and Härtel edition).....Haydn
Concerto for violin and viola.....Mozart
Overture to Coriolanus.....Beethoven
D-minor symphony (No. 4).....Schumann

The orchestra was at its best, every member evidently feeling that rendition at such a celebration would be little short of criminal. We were forcibly reminded of a remark made some years ago by a member of the orchestra, that he always assisted at a Gewandhaus concert with a feeling akin to awe. This feeling pervaded the entire audience, and the executants alike, and lent an air of imposing solemnity to the proceedings. The finale of the symphony by Haydn was enthusiastically encored; the Mendelssohn concerto was played by Joachim, who thirty-two years ago, played the concerto. Together with the program of the present concert each hearer was presented with a small, yellow bit of paper of modest appearance—the "Jubelfest-Lied" of Langhans, which was sung at the close, and were salable at an advance from the lowest point of the week.

Hogs were higher at the close, and the supply was not equal to the demand.

PHILADELPHIA.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 23.—The North American tomorrow will say:

Business was generally dull during the past week, and prices of several leading articles unsettled. In cotton there was no essential change to notice.

The demand for flour continues limited, both for export and home consumption, at the almost total exclusion of others. The Gewandhaus has, on the contrary, presented the greatest variety of works and authors; of these last no less than 60, among them forty-two whose names are familiar to every friend of Bach's works, sixty-five of greater or lesser note have been performed; Beethoven is represented by 108; Mendelssohn by 105; Schumann by 114; Reinecke by sixty-two, etc., etc. The composition of the first Gewandhaus concert is practically unknown, and even the names of the composers are now scarcely mentioned. Haydn is the first great name met with on the old program, a symphony by him having been performed at the 13th, in the third Gewandhaus concert. Mozart appears for the first time in January, 1782, as author of a "Sinfonie, von Wolfgang Mozart." (Mozart the younger, to distinguish him from his father, Leopold Mozart, who is chiefly known in connection through his "Musical Sleighride," with kettledrums, trumpets, oboes; five sets of sleigh-bells, and four persons with couriers' whips; particularly in the Andante, "as the musical critic, Rochlitz, remarked in an article on this, which "represents a lady trembling with the cold"); and for the second time in 1786, after which date he rose gradually but surely to his later commanding position. To Miss Schiott, a pupil of Clementi, who afterwards became Countess Thomaschoff, belongs the honor of having been the first to introduce Beethoven to the Gewandhaus audience, in the aria "Ah, perfido," on Michaelmas-Day, 1796. Beethoven appears in 1801, as the composer of a "Septet for wind instruments," produced, according to the reviewers of the period, a great effect, although the work has been since pronounced spurious. At the head of the program for the 13th of November, 1801, stands the following: "Symphony by Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, in Berlin (for the first time, MS.)." This was probably the Symphony, op. 11, which was published shortly thereafter, and which, although it has since been again been given in the Gewandhaus. The attention of those interested in Gewandhaus statistics may be directed to a new work by Alfred Dörffel: "Festschrift zum 100-jährigen Jubeläum der Einwohnung des Gewandhaus Concert Saales," published under the auspices of the directors. It can be had of Fr. Kistner or of any dealer in music in Leipzig. With Schumann the Gewandhaus concerts may be said to have reached their highest point, after the termination of the cultivation of the modern school of music. The existence of Wagner, Liszt, Rubinstein, Berlioz, and others, is, to be sure, not quite ignored; but these masters, whose influence on the present and future development of musical culture is simply incalculable, can scarcely feel flattered by the amount of attention bestowed upon them. This fact is often made the ground of complaint against the committee of the directors. On the other hand, every true lover of music must rejoice that, in the midst of much change and of real and imaginary progress on all sides, at least one institution devotes itself to the performance of those works which, in the course of the last half-century, have come to be regarded as classical, and an acquaintance with which, in their purity, is indispensable to every educated musician. To-day, the Gewandhaus concerts stand almost alone; now, however, no longer as an experiment, but as a tried and trusted supporter of the best in art.

At the inauguration of the hall a reviewer wrote:

"I was much rejoiced to hear that the new concert hall, the building of which has cost several thousand thalers, was to be inaugurated. Perhaps no certain place in all Germany can show such a hall. More than 500 persons were present, and there was, nevertheless, room for many more. The frescoes on the ceiling are by Oeser, and, according to connoisseurs, are masterpieces. The music makes a wonderful effect in this high and tasteful hall. Herr Berger played a violin concerto with great applause, and one could hear the softest and faintest tones in the most distant corners. . . . Over the orchestra, in the midst of which stands an organ for use in sacred concerts, are two boxes, one for the drummer, the other for the trumpeter; by this arrangement some room is saved in the orchestra; but when the chorus is no fuller than today, the drums and trumpet are much too loud, and unpleasant in the ear."

Now, after the old hall has done duty for a century, it is, in its turn, to be supplanted by a new one. The site for the latter, on the left bank of the Pleisse, between Schimmelstreich and the old Rosental Garden, is definitely fixed upon; the City Council lends funds to the extent of 450,000 marks, and the work will undoubtedly be begun in the spring of 1882. May the next hundred years be as productive of pleasure and benefit to all concerned as the century now so happily brought to a close!

NEBRASKA MASONS.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

LINCOLN, Neb., Dec. 23.—The Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons, which has been in session in this city for the past few days, adjourned yesterday sine die. Representatives of nearly every lodge in the State were present. The proceedings of the Grand Chapter closed with an election of officers for the ensuing term.

Honoring the Lost Cause.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

MERIDIAN (Miss.) Correspondence Picayune, Dec. 19.—On Thursday the interesting ceremony of unveiling the monument which had been erected to the memory of the Confederate dead of Jackson County took place. Col. James E. McMillan delivered a brief but chaste and appropriate oration, at the conclusion of which the unveiling of the monument was successfully accomplished. Messrs. H. D. King and F. R. Carter had charge of this part of the program in charge. On the north side of the monument, under two crossed swords, is the inscription, from the pen of the "poet priest," Father Ryan:

"We care not whence they came,
Dear in their dreams of fame,
Whether unknown or known to fame,
Their cause and country still the same:
They died—and were the gray."

Present side bears the figure of a horseman, and below the inscription:

In Memory of
THE CONFEDERATE SOLDIERS OF JACKSON COUNTY, FLORIDA,
Nov. 5, 1861.

On the south side, under a stack of arms, are these lines:

"Of all the warriors tried and true
Who bore the flag of our people's love,
And fell in a cause, though lost, still just,
And died for liberty—
On the west side, under the figure of a soldier's head, is our State motto:

IN GOD WE TRUST.

kind of a man we want; but he is freaking and pulling it on at the front.

RIGHT HERE

Congressman Sam. Sweet Cobb's old district, comes in near to the mark of what is wanted, perhaps, in any case. He has lost his identity in the Democratic party. He is undoubtedly here at his home that he will not again enter the Democratic caucus, and his people are glad of it. He got the largest kind of a majority—many thinks a MAJ—at the last election.

"How is it in regard to the Republican party?"

"I don't look for very much from that corner. We can only get the kind of relief that is desired from the organization of some kind of an Independent Movement. The Democrats are Bourbon in the extreme. They are opposed to progress in every form; they live in the past; they have also the spirit of the times, and the aspirations of the age, and never look forward to anything in the future. Nothing can keep the Solid South Democratic and hold the offices. The Republican party numbers something like 10,000. It is composed of the negroes and a few leaders and federal office-holders. These office-holders want things to CONTINUE JUST AS THEY NOW ARE.

To be sure, they claim they desire something else—that they are working for something else; but, in reality, they would do all in their power, in my estimation, against any new Independent movement that should recognize State politics with any show of carrying things."

"Why is this?"

"Well, they now hold the Federal offices, such as post-offices and collectorships; and these are more important to them than what might be obtained in the new deal. But it makes no special difference how they may feel. The people are determined to run their own affairs. As soon as they find out that they are really situated between these two fires they will form a new party. There can be no doubt of this; and what I say about this State in reality applies to nearly every other one south of Mason and Dixon's line. To be sure, such men as have been leaders in the State in the Democratic ranks will have to see the anything of the kind I speak of; but they will be among the first to join it, I think, when they see the time has really come. Ben Hill has been as much of a partisan and as much of a Democrat as any in the Senate, but he thinks he has the hold South at his back in support of this course. He will veer around very quickly when he discovers the new course of public sentiment, or else I entirely misunderstand him."

Of course, any visit to Atlanta which would not include the battlegrounds and scenes of the War would be very incomplete; so, in company with a friend, I engaged a hack to drive us first to

THE SPOT WHERE M'PHERSON FELL.

"What part of the North you from?" asked the hackman when we were fairly started.

"How do you know we are from the North at all?" I asked.

"Because you are going out to see the McPherson monument. No Southerners go out there."

"Is that so? Well, we are from Ohio. We live only a few miles from where Gen. McPherson's old mother now lives, and where he is buried, and where the soldiers' monument was erected."

On the way we passed a number of boys, rushed to the side of our carriage with relics of all kinds taken from the battlefield, or said to have been so taken.

"Buy a relic?"

"Not now." We had not got relic-hungry then. That came later.

McPherson, Ohio's gallant General, and the officer of highest rank of any who fell in the War, was killed some two miles from the city toward the south. There is a rough road cut through the brush to the place, and a sign put up at the main road, which reads:

"McPHERSON AVENUE."

The time of year when this road through the scrub-oaks will be an avenue, but it requires the utmost stretch of imagination to call it so now. Little, barefooted urchins, with a few Minie balls and a piece of shell or two, rushed out of the underbrush all along, and held them up at us, and with clamorous appeals requested us to purchase. We kept straight on, however, to our objective point.

The spot where both our driver and guide told us was erected on the exact spot where McPherson fell, consisted of a large field-piece, set with the muzzle down upon the solid rock-base. The "relic word, "McPherson," is rudely carved on the rock, just around the monument is a fence made of rifle-barrels picked up on the field. Sad to say—and it reflects only on Northern visitors, for Southerners rarely care to come here—this monument, rude as it is, is become a target for relic-hunters. Eight of the gun-barrels that form the pickets of the iron fence have been wrenched from their places, and many of the little ornaments on top of the fence have been rudely broken off. In a few years more there will be nothing left except the field-piece; and its size and weight are its only protection from vandalism. The spot is located right in the woods. We were told that most of the little scrub-oaks that stood so close around McPherson when the battle was fought. But a large pine tree, whose trunk was riddled with bullets, stood over the spot. Its cones are in great demand among those who visit the spot. Our driver had not long been a resident of Atlanta, and could give us little information in regard to the battle and how McPherson fell. But, as luck would have it, an old denizen of the place happened along, and was very willing to convey all the information he had to us.

"THE BATTLE WAS REALLY OVER

when McPherson was killed. The firing had ceased, and the Confederates were really beaten. The General was riding across from one wing of the Union forces to the other, when a bullet struck him and he fell dying in a short time. It was about 2 o'clock. A sharpshooter who saw the General and thought he was a fine mark. Those who knew the gallant Federal General say that it was exactly like him not to think of himself. I suppose he was more mourned during the War than any other man. Gen. McPherson at the North?"

We told our ancient friend that he was right in this.

"Do you ever find any relics about here?" I asked.

"O yes—plenty of them after a hard rain. Boys are going over the ground constantly at such times, and pick up what they can find to sell."

On our way back we stopped at a little hut by the wayside, where some boys hailed us to look at their relics. We bought some Minie balls and cannister-shot. Finally one of the "deal-ers" produced a shell.

"What will you take for it?" asked my friend.

"One dollar," said the youth.

"Too much."

"Can get it though."

"I give you 75 cents."

"All right—take it."

The money was paid and the bargain consummated. It was not till afterwards that my friend noticed that and, on hearing the stories of the driver in regard to accidental explosion of shells that had been gathered upon battlefields, he really wished he had his 75 cents back again. The next thing that attracted attention was a round cannon-ball.

THE SHELL WAS LOADED,

"What do you ask for that?"

"Won't sell that."

"Why?"

"Because my father wants to keep it. It ain't like nothing else hereabouts. Never found any other before."

"Won't you set a price?" We were getting anxious for it.

"No—don't want to sell."

"You'd take a dollar for it, wouldn't you?"

"Ought to have more."

"Won't give it. Good-by;" and with that we started to go.

An old man who had sat an idle spectator up to this moment, but who was evidently the grandfather of the younger generation who were engaged in trade, tottered vigorously forward on his cane, and exclaimed in a somewhat angered tone:

"What! won't sell that for a dollar! Well, you are fools, that's enough! Why, I can buy all I want of that kind, or any other, over town for a cent a pound. Here, I'll sell the thing for a dollar if you want it."

But we didn't want it a bit after that kind of an advertisement, and told the aged man that some cold day we might come around again and make a purchase, but for the present we had all we cared to."

There is one thing that is important to note. I found it true here and elsewhere through the South. If there is an idea that you are a Northern man, the price of everything immediately

TAKES A DECIDED UPWARD TENDENCY.

It is firmly believed that the North is full of money, and that all its representatives are very free spending quite liberally this year, on account of the drouth. If two acres produce a bale (500 pounds) we feel very well satisfied."

"Who pays for the ginning and baling of the crop?"

"O we have to do that, of course. Mills for the purpose are started, and take toll for doing their work, just as grist-mills do of your wheat and corn at the North. We have to pay for the iron of which the ties are made; but we get it all back again, and a little more. It makes no difference to us how many bands are put on. After we bring the cotton to market, it is carefully sampled and weighed; the weight as given in sampled and weighed; the weight as given in is marked on the bale, and it is taken to the New York or Liverpool market. But our buyers here are sharp. They pull out a few pounds from every bale that goes through their hands. After a while they have accumulated enough in this way to make a separate bale on their own hook. All that is nothing to us, however."

So far as politics are concerned, I heard many express interest in

THE MAHONE MOVEMENT IN VIRGINIA.

I took pains to talk some on this subject. Said one citizen:

"I am a Democrat, and always have been, and always expect to be; but there are many things in the old movement of State politics that thoroughly disgust me. I know that I am not alone in this. There are many of our best men who are coming to see that the past way of managing has been the direct opposite of progress. What the people of Georgia want is a thorough overhauling of State politics. I don't like that for us. We are and near from all parts of the South. We are Northern people and Northern ways, too, in a way we never saw them before. Our people I always will vote the Democratic ticket; but I want to be in the South of the North. The honest way to send with each man who is dissatisfied at the head of affairs now, would be to let the Bourbon methods with have control. There would be a bad state of affairs for a good name of our State. The thing that we need is some active leader who can go to the front and create enthusiasm in himself and in the people he represents. Alexander H. Stephens is the close it of rate. They soon found that the old man frightened away the customers, and had to open their kites and shoot its food with the cane. I was a spectator of an opinion observed the man participating in the food of the cat, when, when they found means successive for some fishy morsel, received order by a cuff of its paw. Time passed on; the cat became old and rheumatic, and the customers remained to him but very long clients, which, however, were proportionately weak. Of late years the theatre has been always closed, and the rats had increased enormously. Last week a revolution took place among the rats, and when poor Codabinas tried, as usual, to restore order, the rats turned upon him in a fury and tor him to death. At dawn the next day Codabinas was found dead in the middle of the stage, like some tragic hero. The youth of Aurora made a solemn funeral, carrying Codabinas through
